END OF AN ERA

It fair made us weep, guv. As the ACE Team travelled back over the last ten years for our pilgrimage through the decade, even the iron-spirited Rik Haynes was seen to shed a private tear. Farewell Eugene Evans, programmer of the immortal Whacky Waiters, now lost down the brain drain (surely some mistake – it was a terrible game) to the USA; farewell the Microdrive ("...it will have a major impact for sophisticated personal/business software..."); and where do Space Intruders intrude now (probably at number one in some far Eastern country). It's all there, in a giant three part series starting this month. However, when we actually got down to playing some of the Great Old Games, we got a bit of a shock. A few flickering sprites jerked across the screen, something beeped, and then we got ERROR IN LINE 40059. We soon dried our tears: gameplay may be what it's all about, but give us gameplay AND solid-3D state-of-the-art displays (with digitised stereo sound) any day.

- Colour Nintendo Gameboy?

GAMEBOY II

Just when you thought it was safe to start saving up for an Atari colour Lynx console, news comes from the East of a new Nintendo...

Nintendo is planning to launch a full colour version of its highly successful monochrome Gameboy, according to a number of unofficial sources. Its current monochrome Gameboy hand-held system is doing a storm in Japan and USA with demand easily outstripping supply (see ACE 27).

Meanwhile Gameboy is set for a UK debut at the Earls Court Toy Fair in January – along with its rival Atari Lynx colour hand-held console. Some cynics say Nintendo will wait several months before officially disclosing a colour Gameboy – thus allowing them to soak up the profits from its phenomenally successful monochrome. As ACE went to press Nintendo was unavailable for comment.

Meanwhile, Nintendo has just won its long-going court battle with Tengen over the classic Tetris. Nintendo now has exclusive rights to this addictive game – after some confusion over what company had what rights from whom. Although this Nintendo vs Tengen court battle is over, there is still another $100 million lawsuit between the two companies – this time over alleged patent infringement. The final judgment in this case will be in the New Year.

STIMULATING!

A Californian entrepreneur has developed a revolutionary new like-like entertainment race-car simulator. Developed by Driver Seat, the Stimulator is an amusement-park ride similar to Walt Disney's Theatre-Simulator (as featured in ACE 27). Based around a Formula One racing car, the Stimulator is a fully-enclosed motion capsule – a scaled-down version of the many civil and military flight-simulators – which can move at 25 revolutions per minute. In fact, the Stimulators are built by Environmental Technologies for training Navy Pilots. US gamemasters can look forward to experiencing a Stimulator later in the year at their local shopping mall or amusement park – as for their UK counterparts we'll have to wait and see...

SEGA FOR RENT

Virgin/Mastertronic has hit upon another great marketing scheme to promote its Sega Master console – its going to let you rent (or buy) Sega's from your local video rental shop.

Under the scheme, you can go into any RCA/Columbia outlet (there are some 1200 around the UK) and rent out a Sega console or games cartridge. Although market forces will decide the eventual asking price, a rough price guide would be £10 per weekend for the console (with a few games thrown in) and £2 per night for a game (from a selection of twenty top titles). On the subject of the Sega's rental durability, Philip Ley – Sega Brand Manager at Virgin/Mastertronic – told ACE: "we're lucky the Sega's so bullet proof".

SHOP TILL 'YER DROP

Computer City Supercentre – the world's first computer supermarket – opened to a rapturous computer public last month in Garden Grove, California. As well as demonstrations of the latest hard and soft wares there is a soft-ware lab for testing programs. The normal assortment of box-shifters are supplemented by manufacturers such as Apple, IBM and Epson. The next Supercentre will open in San Diego, and Computer City plans to open 20 US stores over the next five years. Unfortunately a UK Supercentre doesn't look very likely, but you never know...

Bros. on CD... Darling Bros. that is!

COMPACT CODE MASTERS

Veteran budgeteers Code Masters has come up with a novel way to sell a games compilation... by releasing it on Compact Disk for Spectrum, C64 and CPC.

The £20 30-game compilation (including Code Masters "classics" like BMX Simulator, Fruit Machine Simulator and Four Soccer Simulators) comes on a CD and leads to connect to a CD player. Code Masters claims its CD will work with 99% of players, with an average load time of just 20 seconds. German software developer, Rainbow Arts already has a similar CD package for the C64 – though the Arts pack only includes six games and costs £30. Amiga, ST and PC owners will have to wait for their CM CD games due to "technical difficulties". Funny enough, Code Masters aren't calling the pack, CD Simulator!

BUDDING BUDO

Electronic Arts' latest PC release is an epic martial arts game with a multitude of opponents and disciplines to master. The most startling thing about the Budokan is its beautiful graphics and wonderful sound: the picturesque backdrops are complemented by life-like sprites and nice little animated touches like flying birds and waterfalls. Even the sampled sound effects through the internal speaker are impressive. As with many EA PC titles, the full complement of graphics modes and sound boards are catered for. ACE has played an preproduction version of the game, and it not only looks and sounds good but also plays extremely well – check out next month's issue for a full review. PC Budokan costs £24.99 and should be available now – other versions may follow later in the year.

NO SEXIST SOFTWARE

OASIS (Organisation Against Sexism in Software) recently celebrated its first anniversary. Sandra Vogel, founder of the organisation and keen ST gamester, decided to campaign against sexist software after playing one offensive game too many. Vogel says, "I can see no reason why stereotypes of women (or men) should have to be used in computer games. One of the advantages this technology has over other games media is that you can do literally anything with a computer".

Membership to OASIS costs £3 (£5 overseas). Members receive six magazines a year, lists of recommended software and names of useful organisations. If you're interested make cheques payable to Sandra Vogel or send an SAE to: Sandra Vogel, 3 Alden Court, Stanley Road, Wimbledon, London SW19 8RD.

NEWS FROM USA

- The Wizard movie from Universal Pictures – starring Fred Savage from the cult Channel Four Sunday evening comedy The Wonder Years – tells the adventures of two brothers at the National Video Game Championships. It opened across America on 15th November, it should be over here during 1990.
- Taito America has bought up the rights to Indiana Jones: The Last Crusade from Lucasfilm Games. The game should be appearing in co-op form sometime this year. Previously, Atari Games handled the co-op conversion of Lucasfilm's Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom.
- Cinemaware games are to be converted over to Nintendo NES. No title details at present, but Defender of the Crown is sure to be among the conversions planned.

IN THE PIPELINE

Entertainment International is so pleased with its latest game that it's licensed the title out to leading US software company Lucasfilm and is planning co-in, console and hand-held versions. With a provisional title of Pipe Dream, the game was originally created by John Dale at the Assembly Line, but once Lucasfilm got involved with the project, it underwent some tweaks in the looks and playability departments. Pipe Dream is one of those simple, but infuriatingly addictive, arcade/puzzle games like Tetris or Xor. Expect to see it sometime in January on Spectrum, C64, CPC, ST, Amiga,

HARD DRIVEN'

ACE INTERVIEWS THE GUYS BEHIND DOMARK'S 937-RATED RACER

Jürgen Friedrich and Mike Day are the programmers behind the ST and Spectrum versions of Hard Drive'n' (reviewed on pages 46/47). Spectrum Hard Drive'n' took five months to write. Day used a Tatum Tenkive as a development system until the source code got too big, he then switched to a PC 386 PDS system. The final source code comes in at 200K, including the bitmap graphics Hex data. Day spent the first month optimising the polygon handling routines – the final game runs at 5 frames per second with a 'virtually unlimited' number of on-screen objects. The CPC and C64 versions use the

What this means to C64 gamers is – unfortunately – monochrome graphics, but Day offers "at least the C64 dash-board will be more colourful". IN ARCADIA HOMICIDAL FRENZY IN COIN-OP COUNTRY...

John Cook runs the gauntlet at the recent Associated Leisure Preview in London and discovers a promising new Tetris challenger...plus

BLOCK HOLE Konami

Tetris is, as you may know, now a global phenomena. On Gameboy (it's bundled with the thing) alone we are talking 5 million and counting. Counting very fast too.

Not surprisingly, that means that just about every software company in the world is trying to produce another arcade puzzle game to be the next Tetris.

There have been some pretty bad attempts so far - Taito's Plotting probably being the worst - but now Konami have come up with an idea that is the best of the bunch yet.

Block Hole is almost like Tetris in reverse; Tetris meets Space Invaders, maybe? The game is this. You control a single space ship moving left/right along the bottom of the screen, just like Invaders. Likewise you fire vertically up the screen - but instead of laser fire, it's building blocks.

Down from the top of the screen comes a series of irregular shapes - loads at once. If one of these shapes reaches the bottom of the screen then you loose a life. So how do you get rid of these shapes? You have to fire bricks at them to make 'em rectangular - then they disappear. Then they start coming faster and faster. Dead simple isn't it? But it works.

There are a few other complications, but this is essentially it - and I can personally vouch that it has much of the appeal and addictiveness of its Big Brother.

As one of the most popular games on offer at the Preview, expect to see Block Hole littering the arcades early next year. And the collective unconscious being what it is, maybe a 'similar' home computer version soon after that!

SPECIAL CRIMINAL INVESTIGATIONS Taito

In recent years, after Op Wolf, Taito's greatest success has to be Chase HQ. This was a chase driving game where you had to imagine you were in Miami Vice, driving a flash motor, zooming after assorted mobile villainy.

When you caught up with them, what did you have to do? Bash the bleedin' car into them until they burst into flames and pulled over. It was never like this in Z Cars.

But despite its success, I always felt that Chase HQ had something missing. That elusive touch that is the dream of all motorists who have ever driven in London (ave. speed during rush hours, 14mph). And that is?

Simple. The ability to lean out of the car with a bazooka and blow all the other scum off

Many of the seaside arcades might seem a bit empty this time of year but, as usual, the trade is busy looking at the entrails of the odd sacred goat, throwing runes, and generally reflecting on what bought in the most money last season and what they'll have to buy to make even more next summer.

To this end, there are two major UK trade exhibitions in the Winter - the first of which was held recently in London - and very well attended too.

Arcade operators made the long trek to the Novotel in Hammersmith to see the latest hardware in action and they weren't disappointed. The big manufacturers take these shows very seriously and there were games that hadn't even been shown at the huge US AMOA show a few weeks previously.

ORGIES OF DEATH

First the bad news. Just when you thought it was safe to go back into the arcades without sporting a flak jacket, both SNK and Sega come out with more electronic shooting galleries.

This is made all the more depressing by Sega's effort, Line of Fire, being its first attempt to produce an Op Wolf clone - having held out for so long. Shown in prototype only, Line of Fire utilises Sega's well tried and tested sprite expansion technology, with well drawn scenery and human military types coming towards you at a constant rate. All you have to do is engage finger onto fire button then disengage both conscience and frontal lobes.

Rather than limiting the player's (and there can be up to two of you) ammunition, Sega have plumped for a bonus based on your percentage of hits - and overall the game seems an excellent example of its type - although I am still mildly dismayed that anyone should want to pay good money to blow away fake human beings.

At least Line of Fire tries to remove the action a little way from reality by using large cartoon bubbles with "Ouch" in, to denote when you get hit.

SNK, of course, had a big success with Mechanised Attack - a two player clone of Op Wolf - which was, strangely, a great deal more successful than Taito's own follow-up to the megahit, Operation

Beast Busters

Thunderbolt. Will they repeat this with Beast Busters?

This can be played by up to three players simultaneously - but gone are the human-like sprites. With this one you are blowing away ghosties, goblins and things that look like they've got terminal wet rot. I'd call it a cross between Op Wolf and Namco's Splatterhouse myself - and as such I guess, skating on my philosophically thin ice, I'd rather see people playing this obviously surreal game than something more 'realistic'.

It'll be interesting to see if these second generation shooting matches have as much success as the former breed - but you can bet they won't install either at the Red Lion in Hungerford.

PINBALL POWER

Two bits of good news from the Show, however. Firstly Pinball seems to be making something of a minor comeback - which only goes to show that some punters have got a bit of common. In the USA the revenue split between vids and pinball is around 45/55, but it's nowhere near that high in the UK - as yet. With the great tables that are being produced at the moment, however - Black Knight 2000, Monday Night Football, Police Force, Elvira, Bone Busters, etc., maybe that will change over here?

Secondly, someone has come up with an arcade puzzle game that is almost as good as Tetris (Block Hole - see below). Let's hope there are lots more to come.

the road (tee, hee, gibber, gibber). Special Criminal Investigations - effectively Chase HQ II - allows you to do this and - by golly it is so satisfying that I've got the psychoanalyst booked already.

Controls are almost identical to Chase, with the addition of fire buttons on the strut of the steering wheel. Press it and - boring - at first you just get a pea shooter of a piece to administer truth and justice with.

But if you're good - very, very good - the DA

Special Criminal Investigations

drops you upgraded hardware by helicopter and then the fun really starts. Kaboom!

Not the kind of thing you expect to get a great deal of intellectual stimulation from - but if they ever release an M25 scenery ROM for it you'll have to prise me off the cabinet with a crowbar.

EXTERMINATOR Gottlieb

Gottlieb? Who are they? Well hold on a bit, Gottlieb generally makes quite good pintables - the latest being a super-fast effort called Bone Busters. But curiously, it has now entered the video market - and in the weirdest possible way.

People like me often criticize manufacturers for lack of imagination and choosing to make safe and easy games. But there again, it's not our houses on the line if the games bomb!

I anticipate someone at Gottlieb is either going to be very rich - or homeless - in the near future, as Exterminator is a completely new and fresh game. As such it seemed bewildering to many operators.

The look of the thing for a start - digitised backgrounds and sprites. The theme; surreal man! You control a disembodied hand which can stamp on and fire at attack waves of household objects that come out of the screen at you.

A non-standard control system doesn't help matters much - making the game quite difficult to get into. And I'm not even sure if I like it or not. But it show that someone can still use their imagination and is still willing to take a flyer in this business. For that at least, I strongly recommend you give it a try.

YET MORE MOANS – AND VERY UNDERSTANDABLE TOO – ABOUT THE LACK OF VERSIONS FOR CERTAIN MACHINES, A HEART-WARMING STORY OF COMPUTER GAMING SOLIDARITY AND A SAD TALE OF A MOTHER'S GAMES OBSESSION DEPRIVING HER SON OF TIME ON THE MACHINE...

WHERE OH WHERE?

A few issues ago in ACE the Firebird game Rainbow Islands was reviewed. It was rated 934 and I thought it would be a great game to get for ST. Since then I have heard nothing about it. All the mail order companies I have phoned don't have it, it's not in any of my local software shops and I was surprised not to find it in you Xmas '89 runners and drivers section. Can you tell me what's happened to it?

Also, do you know if the arcade game Prehistoric Isle will be converted to the home computer? Is Golden Age being converted?

Craig Sutherland, Scone

There will be probably be an ST version of Rainbow Islands, but just at the moment it's anybody's guess when, or on what label, it will appear. As for the other two games you mention, we haven't heard of any conversions underway.

MOUSE GROUSE

May I appeal to games designers, programmers and software houses to always include a facility to play from the keyboard and the mouse. Some of us out here use our computers for work and a) haven't got the room and b) don't want to have joysticks around. There are several games I would have purchased - but I was deterred from buying them as they were joystick only. I can fly around and blow things up perfectly adequately on Mirrorsoft's Falcon without recourse to the joystick. So come on programmers - make sure that your products are available to the widest possible audience by including keyboard or mouse or joystick playing.

Secondly, although I have read that some software companies are abandoning the Atari ST for the Amiga, are they really so foolish as to forget the hundreds of thousands of potential Atari ST software buyers?

Mike Taylor, Hamburg

If you're interested in games it really is time you got round to buying a joystick; it makes a lot of games a whole lot easier and more enjoyable. However, we take your point - programmers should, wherever possible, include mouse and keys options. As for your second point we doubt whether software houses are quite so foolish as to abandon the ST. It's a strong market for them, especially in Europe, and they aren't going to turn down the chance of making more money, are they?

HOURS OF FUN

I must say I've had hours of fun playing with the 'Get 12 Issues Of ACE Comfortably Into The Folder' game that you gave away free when I last renewed my subscription.

Unfortunately, I have to admit that it has me beaten, although I did manage 11 issues before the folder exploded, showering me and the bedroom with bits of wire, magazine articles, and other assorted debris.

Can I, through your pages, ask if anybody has beaten my record (which included last December's bumper issue)?

Malcolm Crawley, Saltdean, Sussex

Despite a collective IQ that fails to make three figures we can reveal that members of the ACE team have indeed broken your record, smoothly inserting all 12 of the year's issues into one binder.

GOD SQUAD

Dear mortal ACE readers, I am the Deity who plans to make sure that violent computer games stay, not only on Earth but in the whole Universe.

I believe that a computer game does not turn J.B. Good into that Terminator or anyone else for that matter. Violent games are great for letting off steam, and just for great fun.

When my followers are killed on the field of Populous I turn to Operation Wolf to do the job myself. No, I don't throw bolts of lightning at innocent humans, I don't even pick up an M-16 and turn to extreme violence - I turn on my ST!

Why must some stupid mortals go against violent games? soon it will be violent TV shows. I will never understand why some mortals believe that violent games cause murders and so on. I'll bet my Godliness that it's because they never got to play a violent game.

I would like to make ACE the God of ALL computer magazines!

Zsott Malota, New South Wales, Australia

Your wish is our command; from now on ACE is the God of all computer magazines.

ST SALT OF THE EARTH

At 8 pm (or 20 hundred hours as those naval types say) I received a phone call from a fellow ST user. He had seen my plea for help in your helpline column and proceeded to provide me with the cheat mode to Psynopsis' Barbarian. In my hurry to load up I did not thank him for his long distance call. So to the Lancashire bloke who saved my hair (private joke) I'd like to say THANKS!

I'd appreciate you printing this letter as I feel it shows the good nature of ST users.

INFERNAL ENGINE

I was very interested to read your article about the PC Engine. Our 13-year-old son has driven us mad with computer games for the last two years. So, when he read a report earlier this year in various mags about the PC Engine, he had to have one.

So in June of this year when for months he had saved to buy one we went along to a shop in London. full of excitement we got it home and - guess what? All it did was flash and roll up the screen. The game had cost £45 so I was hopping mad, we went back to the shop and it worked for them. We travelled up to London eight times; each time they changed parts and games but nothing helped. I demanded my money back, but all they would give me was a credit note. This we took, but when we went back they gave us another PC Engine as they didn't sell anything else my son wanted. Then I discovered it worked on my old black and white television - and on TVs that had vertical hold knobs. So we bought an old colour TV and,

Bingo, it worked.

So now I read your article about PC Engines in ACE I know it was not us. I think more research should have gone into this Engine before it was allowed to be sold in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. P. Priestley, Croydon

It's a sad tale, Mrs. Priestley, and we can only commiserate with you. We're mystified as to why the shop wouldn't give you your money back. But at least with your old colour telly things seem to be a bit more fun now.

MEAN MUM

Way back in 1983 my sister received a Speccy 48K for Christmas. All went well for two years, then two problems arose.

One was that I accidentally bought a game, Haunted Hedges, which is pathetic. My mum can't last five minutes without it. And, two, the pressure pads are bust (no thanks to Daley Thompson).

So as I got sick of this I bought a C64 two years ago. The problem is, though, that we've only got one TV for the two computers, and I never get to play the C64.

So I'm asking you to do a little review on the letters pages and tell my mum how good or bad it is.

Paul Evans, Wallasey, Merseyside

Come on Mrs. Evans – have a heart! It's just not fair depriving your son of his fun on the C64. Give it a whirl – you might even like it yourself.

BUG HUNTER

I have found a bug in the PC version of The Amazing Spiderman and Captain America in Dr. Doom's Revenge. Any time during the game you can save your position at the comic screens by pressing B. Later on in the game when you die press Y in the Statue of Liberty scene. When you see the starting comic screen then press R and you should return to your saved position with full energy.

F-16 COMBAT LETTER

I write to express my disappointment with your recent review of Digital Integration's F-16 Combat Pilot game on the Amiga. I dispute that the game is superior or even comparable to Interceptor, or that it is the 'best of the bunch' as you describe.

Digital Integration cannot be oblivious to the fact that a lot of serious Amiga simulation players enjoy the benefits of two disk drives. So why do they find it necessary to release an expensive 'quality' computer program which reduces the hapless purchaser to a state of constant disk-swapping? The game is far from user-friendly: I am no stranger to computers but it took me a good twenty minutes to figure out the Data Disk requests, which of course go undocumented in what passes for a manual. The graphics that greet the player in the mess room are blocky and poor, the character set in which the text for messages is presented is barely legible, and the mouse pointer is flickery and jerky.

The finish of the product is nowhere near that of Interceptor. If you need reminding, load Interceptor up and compare the sound: on F-16 Combat Pilot, for the engine we hear an undulating cacophony of white noise – while Interceptor boasts a full-throated engine noise and realistic weapon sound effects. On Interceptor we have responsive, intelligent controls – a quick stab on the keyboard is all that's needed for undercarriage, brakes, radar etc. – and it's all very clear on the display. Combat Pilot, however, is quite a different affair. Key-presses are 'sticky' and everything makes the same 'bleep' – there is no quick touch, no quick response, and often pressing a key produces no net effect at all and it needs to be pressed twice. This is certainly no the way a simulation should be.

The aircraft movement is also vastly inferior to Interceptor: nowhere do we have the sensation of speed, nowhere can we investigate the scenery or accurately whizz within inches of control tower or suspension bridge. And as controls go, joystick response in combat Pilot is jerky and lacks any sort of 'feel'. The scenery can only be described as crap. A few old rocks and a tawdry white building here and there to break up the monotony, and where are the 'out of cockpit' all round views on Combat Pilot as seen in Interceptor and nobler underdog Falcon? They're not – and we quickly lose another enjoyable element. Of course, it may well be very realistic, it may well be that sitting inside a real F-16 induces one to continually and needlessly swap floppy disks. It may well be true that written instructions from the aircraft are near-illegible, it may well be true that written instructions from the aircraft are near unintelligible. It may be an unfortunate side-effect of flying such aeroplanes that from one's cockpit mountains all look like great pink pyramids. The silly booklet protection scheme I can live with – but then let's get this into perspective: who'd want to copy this programming the first place? It's a waste of money and I feel that is a shame that popular magazines can longer be relied on for good advice. Next time, regardless of how highly you rate a program, I shall make damn sure that I get an 'evaluation' copy from a friend before I lay out more of my hard-earned cash.

I have been an Amiga owner for a year but an ACE reader for only one issue. If you wish to keep your readership you simply cannot continue giving ratings like 9/10 to programs so flawed and which obviously poor quality. 9 man years it may well have taken, but it takes me four hours to earn £25 – and that's half a day of my life. I didn't need to spend money on the game – but putting my faith in your judgement I did so and I regret it. So please, in future, remember that just because a game is getting old (e.g. Interceptor) it does not mean that it isn't still the best of its kind or that you should forget it and needlessly applaud potential rivals to theretch-inducing degree of synchophony witnessed in the F-16 Combat Pilot review: 'the aircraft's stability is quite incredible', Cought And '...response and feel of the aircraft is superlative.' Choke! And how about '...an essential addition to your collection.' Well, it isn't essential to mine and has provided me with about as much enjoyment as watching the plastic plants grow at Newport Pagnell MacDonald's.

So come on chaps, consider the users out here. To prevent reviews of this sort being repeated it would probably be advisable to have more than one reviewer 'on the case'; for any one program or to provide the names of the reviewers responsible for the individual reviews so that we know whose judgement may be more in line with that of the reading individual. This is the way the old Crash magazine used to work and I have not seen a better reviewing system anywhere else. And these days, with sales as high as £25-30, mistakes are costly.

Richard A. Harrison, London

ACE Reviews Editor, Laurence Scotford, replies:

Unfortunately you seem to have misread, or misunderstood this review. The phrase "the best of the bunch" was comparing the Amiga version of F-16 combat pilot with other versions of the same game. At no point in the review was there any direct comparison with any of the other products you mention.

I'm afraid that I really cannot agree with your slating of F-16 Combat Pilot. It is a program designed to appeal to simulator fans who are looking for realism, rather than general game players who would be more interested in gimmicks such as the out of cockpit views that you mention.

Regarding the problems that you had with flickery pointers and sticky keys, we experienced none of these. I would suggest that the problems may be caused by either a defective machine or defective software.

Although ACE reviewers try to be as fair and objective as possible in the way that they review games, it is impossible to ignore the fact that personal opinion and tastes will always figure in any review in any magazine. It is inevitable that occasionally a reviewer's feelings about a product will not concord with your own. In the case of this particular simulation I ought to point out that yours is the only letter of disagreement we have received. Furthermore, if you care to glance at our Stock-market feature on page 163 of the December Issue, you will see that F16 Combat Pilot was the most highly rated program across all the entertainment magazines that month. Obviously I am not alone in my opinion of the product!

CLEAR FOR TAKE OFF

I have just read your write-up of the Bomber flight simulator. In it Mr. Lewis of Vektor Graphics states that 'all sims before have been either commercial Lear Jets and Cessnas or they've been fighters.' Now I'd like to know if there are any commercial jet flight simulator games around, as I'd love to take to the skies in a Boeing 757 or an Airbus 310, landing at airports like Paris and New York before getting back to Gatwick.

I know that Flight Simulator does have different scenery disks for Europe, Japan, etc., but as far as I know their flight instructions only cover Learns and Cessnas.

It would be nice if someone brought out a commercial flight sim with the same cockpit detail as Falcon or F-16 and combined it with different scenery disks. I would be grateful if you could give me any info on games about, or if any software publisher plans to produce one.

A. Turville, Warringlid, Sussex

No, we don't know of any such games. There was an arcade machine from Taito called (if memory serves us well) Taito Airline. The problem with this thing was that hardly anybody played it – probably because it was too boring compared to the other delights on offer. There are two main problems with the kind of game you'd like to see; there's no fighting (unless you introduce a hijacking element) and there's no great test of flying skill – smaller planes such as the Cessna needing more control than the big uns. So we think it's unlikely you'll see that game...

ARCHIE ANGST

I occasionally buy ACE as I find your game reviews the best of any magazine. However, I own a BBC B and shortly intend to upgrade to an Acorn A3000. Unfortunately I don't share K. Pardes's view that Archie games are receiving more coverage in ACE; if they are, it's very slow progress.

I am aware of 65 games currently available for the Archie and another 39 under development which should be ready by Christmas. How many have been fea-

VERY, VERY SAD

I was/am very very sad when I read a letter by another Dutchman (Eddy Borremans) in ACE from November saying that it's completely normal to copy games in Holland, and that computers are only bought because you can get your software for free and as such is part of our culture.

Well let me set this straight at once. Eddy should shut up and stop generalising with everything he says because he makes other people think that the whole of Holland is a bunch of software pirates who find it quite normal to copy games. Well, it ain't true.

I have owned a C64, which included a lot of games and of course there were copies, but I can proudly say that about 75% of the top-of-range games I owned were bought (by airmail in England, because it's cheaper).

Of course I understand why they copy:

1) they want to be able to brag to their friends about the amount of games they own. This shows how spoiled these RATS really are.

2) The games they copy are indeed very expensive – which is no reason to do it.

I read in his letter that he is a computer science student, who probably doesn't know anything about economics. Otherwise he would have known that if the number of games sold goes up, the company can lower the price because they have to make less profit on each game to reach their goal.

It is quite unbelievable that Eddy is a student. It would be better to describe him as a man with the brains of a 12-year-old and someone who doesn't deserve to be Dutch.

Richard van Gils, Utrecht,

Holland

Stern words – would Eddy like to reply?

tured in ACE? Five, if you're lucky.

Sure, the user base is small at the moment, but then again how many have got the PC Engine? With its speed, graphics and sound capabilities there are going to be very few consoles that can match the Archie's game-playing ability and of course it is first and foremost a powerful computer.

I look forward to the games promised by the likes of Domark and Ocean and also to the smaller names like Impact, Periscope, Clares and CIS, all of whom should be congratulated for their efforts and for taking a risk.

In the meantime, how about ACE reviewing Interdictor, E-Type or Karma? The Archie deserves some attention and in the end it can only be good news for ST and Amiga owners too when games of the quality of Zarch/Virus are converted to run on their machines.

Alex Card, Aldeburgh, Suffolk

Take a gander at page 84 of this issue and you will find a review of Interdictor on the Archie – which will, we promise, be the first of many reviews

ONE BIT BRAIN

Someone with a one-bit processor for a brain actually had the nerve to compare a games console with a computer (ACE 26). What's next? some girl writing to you, telling you she prefers her Barbie doll to her brother's Amiga?

I don't care if the latest consoles go up to the 16 billion colours and make your chair move along with the action. They are TOYS and a computer isn't. I'd like to see Chris Blowes design a cover for a club magazine, make an advert with a DTP program, write a letter, etc., with his Sega. Computer users can do all of that (and a lot more) and still enjoy a good game afterwards.

Someone also complained about the low ratings of Sega games. No wonder – only racing, beat 'em ups and shoot 'em ups. What about GOOD games like RPG and adventures? What about Populous, Dungeon Master and Sim City, to name but a few ACE rated games? Never seen one of those on a Sega. Someone mentioned Thunderblade? I played it once, and found it to be completely stupid and boring. Compare this with F-16 Combat Pilot and Falcon and you'll see what I mean.

Mind you, I don't look down on console players, but they have to play in their own league. It's like someone in a Lada with racing stripes who thinks he can beat a Porsche. If your only desire is playing games? Good. Buy a console. But if you want something that is a challenge every day, that is endlessly more versatile and creative and makes your brain work, buy a computer.

Luc Stynen, Berchem, Belgium

THE ACE STOCK MARKET

HERE'S WHERE YOU CHECK OUT WHICH GAMES ARE GETTING THE HOTTEST REVIEWS IN MAGAZINES AROUND THE COUNTRY - THE HOT RELEASES YOU MUSTN'T MISS. YOU CAN ALSO PRACTISE YOUR GAMES MARKET SKILLS BY PREDICTING NEXT MONTH'S FIGURES - AND WIN GREAT PRIZES! THE ENTRY FORM IS ON PAGE 24..

The ACE Stockmarket is really getting into full swing this month. You can see for the first time how the 'share prices' of the various software houses have fluctuated (see the Company Counter on the right) and, if you were one of the many readers who sent in the form for Round One, you can check out whether you're due for a prize.

If you missed Round One, here's a quick recap. The stockmarket trades over four counters. The 8-bit Counter features the top ten games on Amstrad, Spectrum, and C64. The 16-bit Counter features the top ten for the ST, Amiga, and PC.

In addition to the two 'Processor Counters' there is also the Machine Counter. Here the top five games for each of the six most popular machines are listed.

Remember that these listings are different. They are not your typical chart entries, which rely simply on sales. Here at ACE we've always distrusted that method of charting: a game that's been hyped outrageously can always sell its way to the top, before everyone realises that it's a pile of rubbish and consigns it to the rubbish bin.

Instead, the ACE Stockmarket fixes its prices according to the reviews ratings each game has received in the UK Magazines. Our researchers read every magazine they can get their hands on during the month, and the games that top the ACE Charts really deserve to be there. So you can not only use the Stockmarket to win prizes, but you can also treat it as a valuable buying guide.

In order to give a fair and true overall picture of a title or company's rating, and to guard against 'rogue' reviews, ratings are statistically weighted, and titles must have more than one single review rating to be included in the Machine Counter and the Processor Counters. Similarly, publishers must have more than one product to qualify in the Company Counter. This explains why some titles appear in some charts and not others.

On the page overleaf you'll also find an entry form. Check out the Stockmarket each month, get a feeling for the way the market changes as the software companies release new titles during the year, and watch out for ACE rated games, any one of which may be a contender for one of the Stockmarket entries. And a really high rating could drive up the share price of the company that released it.

Then try to forecast next month's positions. There's £25 worth of software waiting for the first winner in each category to be picked at random on the closing date. Don't miss it!

THE COMPANY COUNTER

There three columns of ratings for companies each month in the ACE Stock Market. The first shows the overall score for this month, statistically calculated from hundreds of reviews in magazines during the current month. The second shows the amount of change - up or down - from the previous month. The third is the share price: the company's rating relative to its past performance. To get into the share price listing, companies need to be releasing products reviewed by magazines. To see their fortunes rise, they need to be consistently improving their product. In the short term, the 'one-hit wonder' will seem to do well; in the longer term, consistency will pay off.

Delphine's fortunes took a sharp Stock Market upturn when it followed up the tepidly-received Castle Warrior with Future Wars. But can Delphine keep up this rate of improvement. Reline's Oil Imperium is obviously growing on people, while The Edge's budget label RAD is unearthing some lost long treasures in its golden oldie catalogue.

ACE tip for next month's top five: Rainbow Arts. Rock'n'Roll is one of the hot titles of the moment (see the Machine and Processor charts) and this month's review ratings should see its share price soar.

THE MACHINE COUNTER

AMIGA RATINGS

F16 Combat Pilot	Digital Integration	97.33
Rock'n'Roll	Rainbow Arts	92.17
Xenon II: Megablast	Image Works	89.67
Laser Squad	Blade	89.33
Batman - the Movie	Ocean	89.27

Delphine/Palace's Future Wars just missed out on a placing here in a very high scoring month for Amiga games. F16 Combat Pilot still rules the roost - how on earth will Digital Integration keep up this sort of scoring?

ATARI ST RATINGS

Damocles	Novagen	94.63
Xenon II: Megablast	Image Works	91.13
Interphase	Image Works	89.6
Paperboy	Elite	87
Games: Summer Edition	US Gold	85

Two in the top five for Image Works, but Xenon II is pretty well played out now - you'll see more solutions and playing tips for it than reviews - whereas Damocles is only just getting going.

PC-COMPATIBLE RATINGS

Carrier Command	Rainbird	96.25
Bomber	Activision	92.08
F15 Strike Eagle II	Microprose	87.75
M1 Tank Platoon	Microprose	87.5
Indiana Jones Adv	US Gold	84.75

It's not compulsory to make your PC games aerial combat simulations - but it obviously helps. That's three in the top five for Microprose as well, now that Rainbird is under its wing, and PC Carrier Command must surely be one of the most highly rated titles ever.

SPECTRUM RATINGS

Myth	System 3	94
Untouchables	Ocean	92.92
Operation T-bolt	Ocean	92
Batman - the Movie	Ocean	91.01
Ghouls'n'Ghosts	US Gold	88

All very tight in the Spectrum top five. Ocean's Batman and Untouchables have had rave reviews everywhere - see them slip to make room for something else next month.

COMMODORE 64 RATINGS

Turbo Outrun	US Gold	95
Myth	System 3	92.5
Ghosts'n'Goblins	Encore	92
Power Drift	Activision	90.07
Omega	Origin	87.5

Straight in at number one, and the first reviews of Turbo Outrun are wildly enthusiastic. It will be interesting to see how the other formats score over the next couple of months (we certainly didn't like the ST version). But the consistently high rating of Ghosts'n'Goblins shows that some of the oldies can still hold their own with the flashy products of today.

AMSTRAD CPC RATINGS

Christmas Collection	Hewson	91.5
Dynamite Dux	Activision	86
Dragon Spirit	Domark	80.75
Shinobi	Virgin	75

Signs here that the CPC sometimes gets the best of the 8-bit conversions: Dragon Spirit and Shinobi, which were both in last month's top five as well, have had consistently better reviews on the CPC than other formats.

THE 16-BIT COUNTER

It looks as though it was worth the wait for Damocles - the reviewers are raving about it and it goes straight in at number one. Also scoring consistently over 90% is Rock'n'Roll - and with only a tiny fraction of the publicity of its neighbours at numbers one and three.

Damocles	Novagen (Am, ST)	94.13
Rock'n'Roll	Rainbow Arts (Am)	92.17
Xenon II: Megablast	Image Works (Am, ST)	89.67
Interphase	Image Works (Am, ST)	88.9
Future Wars	Delphine/Palace (Am)	88.75
Continental Circus	Virgin (Am, ST)	87.34
Stunt Car Racer	Micro Style (Am, ST)	87

GOLDCUT GAMES

FROM DRUG BUSTER TO SAMURAI WARRIOR, US GOLD HAS A GAME FOR EVERYONE

Birmingham-based software company US Gold is preparing to blitz the games playing public with a colossal collection of games due for release between now and Spring. ACE has gone on the road to Birmingham (yes, we're that dedicated), taking a sneak look at the forthcoming US Gold line-up...

In the past, USG has suffered a fair amount of criticism concerning the quality of its computer games - particularly with its micro conversions of Sega's Out Run for instance. Taking note of this disparagement, USG embarked upon a bold scheme involving the complete reconstruction of its management and software development structures. The result was dramatic. A newlook USG produced two of its most respected games: Forgotten Worlds and Strider. Now USG plans to surpass these chart-toppers - both in terms of commercial success and technical standards.

David Baxter, Software Development Manager at USG told ACE, "we experienced numerous problems in the past, especially in product quality and control - now we only use software developers that we know and trust."

Surprisingly, USG prefers to use software development companies instead of in-house programmers. The actual USG software development team is organised by Baxter and two other managers, with two games testers giving each game a thorough going-over. But life for these guys can be tough going, as USG has a staggering 160 games formats under development at any one time.

THE USG SCHEDULE

As well as the prestigious Lucasfilm Games (see Battle of Britain and Loom previews on pages 133 and 100) and SSI licensed products, USG also has a myriad of coin-op conversions and original games planned. One of the first games due on the release schedule is Ghosts 'n' Ghosts - the follow-up to Capcom's phenomenally successful Ghosts 'n' Goblins coin-op. G 'n' G has been programmed by Software Creations, the guys that brought us the brilliant micro conversions of Bubble Bobble and Bionic Commandos. Take a look at page

68 to see if we think they've done as good a job with Ghosts 'n' Ghosts.

Another Capcom coin-op conversion, Black Tiger, is due out next February across all major formats. BT has been on the cards for ages - "an absolute age", quips Baxter - in fact it will be approximately 18 months late when it does finally arrive. BT is a six level, eight-way scrolling fantasy arcade adventure, with ST and Amiga versions programmed by Graham Lilley (Heroes of the Lance and the forthcoming Dragons of Flame), C64 BT from Softworx and Spectrum and CPC versions converted by Tiertex. Baxter characteristically sums up BT as "a big platform jobbie". But behind the BT development story there lies a very sad tale, for an 18 year old programmer suffered a nervous breakdown while working on one of the micro conversions. He has now swapped his disk drive for a spanner - working as a trainee mechanic for Ford. Who said programming computer games was easy?

Sega's Crackdown coin-op should be out a month later in March - with ARC Developments (Forgotten Worlds) handling the micro conversions. Crackdown is a simultaneous two-player, 16-level sci-fi exploration shoot'em-up featuring a slightly-overhead Gauntlet-type view. A PC version is planned for May.

Among the other coin-op's licences due are Capcom's Dynasty Wars - a six-level simultaneous two-player hack 'n' slash arcade adventure set in Feudal Japan - due sometime in the Summer, Sega's fantasy-epic Golden Axe and the horiz-scrolling shoot'em-up U.N. Squadron from Capcom. Out of these trio of games, Baxter seems most enthusiastic about Dynasty Wars, claiming it to be the most blood-thirsty game he can think of.

AND THERE'S MORE...

Back in March USG decided to commission a new label solely dedicated to producing original games - mainly on 16-bit formats with console and C64 versions under consideration. The as yet unnamed label has six games due for release over the next six months with a view for worldwide release instead of USG's more usual European-only approach. Two of the new original games, Rotox and Sphericle, are particularly impressive beasts. Rotox is being programmed by Binary Design and features Rotoscoping – a new programming graphics technique which rotates the whole screen around you. It took Binary Design nine months to develop the Rotoscope code using USG funding. The nearest we've seen to this technique is in the Tengen Assault coin-op.

Heavy Metal an Access (Leaderboard, Beach Head) multi-stage tank-simulation due out on Spectrum, C64, CPC, ST, Amiga and PC in January.

The Rotoscope graphics routines used in Rotox took nine months to develop.

Sphericle, on the other hand, is a totally original puzzle arcade game using ray-traced graphics. Sphericle may be converted over to the Archimedes, which would bring welcome relief to games starved Archie gamers.

While on the subject of more exotic USG micro conversions, SAM Coupe gameplayers (if there are any!) will be pleased to hear about the SAM version of Strider. Amazingly, it will only take the programmer two weeks to convert Strider over to the SAM! Admittedly, the programmer is very experienced – with the Spectrum, CPC and PC conversions of Strider already under his belt. The SAM version itself uses ST graphics, Spectrum program logic and will have eight-channel sound. SAM Strider should be out anytime now.

Baxter ended our visit to the USG offices with a hint of future plans: "there will be 10 new Capcom games, a licensed (not coin-op) road racing game and another new label using the talents of a single well respected programmer with six original 16-bit only games planned – all due before the end of 1990. And that's just the stuff I can tell you about!"

Sphericle: "the game that does for particle physics what Einstein did for video games" (Phrase © 1989 David Baxter All Rights Reserved)

ACE FLASHBACK!

Before 1980 if you had a computer in your house, you would have built it yourself, and you would have thought of yourself as an electronics whiz, not a computer enthusiast. If you had a microcomputer at work, you would be in a specialist, electronics/science-orientated profession, and the micro would in all likelihood be a Commodore PET. Your home computer would have taken days hunched over a hot soldering iron to assemble and you wouldn't be thinking of playing games with it. For that there were dedicated Atari consoles from the States.

And it was in the US where people were buying Apple II's in hundreds of thousands, and the new Atari 400/800 machines. While the Atari's, like their VCS predecessors, were very much games machines, the Apple II's were used for serious applications as well for games. American computer users tended to be older, with more money to spend on serious commercial software.

It is more than likely that we in the UK would have gone on to follow the American market slavishly, and rely solely on American imports, were it not for one company - Sinclair Research. The ZX80, which sold to those electronics enthusiasts and the ZX81, which brought home computing to the non-specialist, gave the UK a distinct, 'techie' flavour of its own.

By 1980, it was clear that 'off-the-peg' computers would sell into the home sooner rather than later. Already some of the burning issues of the day bore an uncanny resemblance to debates which will carry on into the nineties. For example, in August 1980, an article in Personal Computer World discussed three issues: a) "does existing legislation cover electronic media"; b) "Is digitised pornography on a disk actionable"; c) "what is the correct intellectual property to afford to (software) to protect it from bootleggers and pirates?"

By 1981, Motorola was offering its new 68000 processor as a chip for the 80s, the Z80 and 6502 were already well-established, and IBM was introducing its first 8088-based PC. The chances are that your computer uses one of these and yet they are all at least nine years old. What has dramatically changed computers into the colourful, fast, sophisticated machines of today are the advances made in terms of graphic processing, of dedicated graphics and sound chips, such as the early examples in the Commodore 64 to those of the Amiga today. Faster, bigger data storage systems have led to much bigger, multi-level programs. Devices can now be made much smaller: slim-line monitors, disk drives tucked into the keyboard - machines of a size which can be accommodated easily into the home. And finally, memory chip prices have tumbled, so that all the technology that was available in theory eight or nine years ago is now affordable and mass-produced.

More evolution than revolution, really.

ARRIVALS AND DEPARTURES

The Sinclair ZX80 - first shown to the public in February - was the first sub-£100 'computer'. Available for £79.95 in kit form and £99.95 ready-built, the ZX80 was a flat slab of white plastic. Those cooling vents along the top back are actually painted black lines - an optical illusion which was commented on in more than one press review. It had a touch-sensitive keyboard, 1K RAM, an NEC 780-1 processor, which was a 'copy' of the Z80, and built-in Sinclair Basic. Graphics? Not produced until 1981. Sound? Forget it. Software? You had to write it yourself - indeed, that was the whole idea of the ZX80.

Another kit-form computer launched this year was the Acorn Atom, for £125 as a kit and £150 ready-built. The Atom claimed to be 3-5 times faster than Apple Integer BASIC, "and it has the unique feature of including an assembler in the interpreter". But the Acorn Atom boasted graphics as well: a screen with a high resolution of 256 x 192, five graphics modes and 192 graphics characters.

Acorn suffered from production problems with the Atom, so much so that one retailer, described in Personal Computer World as the "incurable" manager of Lasky's Microdigital chain, announced to all and sundry that he would not include the Atom in his next catalogue because he was too uncertain of receiving any stock from Acorn. That manager's name was Bruce Everiss; the computer industry was to hear quite a bit more from him.

Atari had no UK division in those days; instead the Atari 400/800 machines were imported by Ingersoll,

Hewson Consultants Founded: 1980

Having worked with mainframes and minis during the seventies, Andrew Hewson was an early buyer of the Sinclair ZX80. He began writing programmes and books for the machine, and advertising them in the few magazines which existed then. Andrew made his name with books of programs for the ZX80, ZX81 and later the Spectrum. Pilot Mike Male wrote three flight sims for the ZX81 before his 1983 program, Heathrow Air Traffic Control, and the arcade games written by Steve Turner in 1983-84 - Space Wars, Seikidō (baddest backwards) Attack and Lunatic - put real money in Hewson's bank. Hewson claims to be the oldest surviving independent games software publisher.

EVENTS

If you visited WH Smith's outlet in Brent Cross Shopping Centre in North London, you could witness a curious 'experiment'. Market development manager John Rowland was putting together the first 'Computer Know-how' unit. A Commodore PET borrowed from a local dealer, a few copies of Byte magazine and a small range of books, "which were actually all about calculators because we couldn't find any computer books," says John, made up the display. The crush of interested customers around the stand was so great that it had to be roped off.

The success of the Brent Cross venture led John to ask Clive Sinclair in September about selling the mail-order only ZX80 in WH Smith. "Clive suggested that rather than take on the ZX80, I should wait for his

Where are they now?

Nolan Bushnell

Nolan Bushnell was the founder of Atari, which he set up as an R&D firm. However, it had diversified into games, when Nolan wrote the commercial video program, Pong, back in 1972. (He himself claims his first ever game was a little known number called Computer Space.) He released 20 or so more under the Atari banner before selling the company to Warner Communications in 1976. Nolan then set up a company to design and manufacture robots, from simple functional devices to Peltsters, a light hearted toy cum robot. Today he also runs coin-op manufacturer Axlon and AAFES, which makes a micro TV board for the Apple Macintosh. All the companies are based in California.

ARRIVALS AND DEPARTURES

The Commodore Vic 20 was shown publicly for the very first time at the January Consumer Electronics show in Las Vegas, and was launched in the UK in June. It wasn't the first colour computer, but it was the first to sell for under $300, at $299.95. The Vic 20 had 5K RAM, a full-size keyboard which was later used in the Commodore 64, and its own custom chip, VIC (Video Interface Chip). It went on sell over two million units worldwide over the next three years.

The first UK-produced Vic 20 game appeared in September. Published by Mr Micro at £16, it was entitled Gold Rush, and the first person to complete it would win a bag of 22 carat gold.

The Sinclair ZX80 got its first games and Clive Sinclair was reportedly 'tickled pink' that programmers had produced graphics on the computer. The program was Space Invaders and readers of Tim Hartnell's book Making the Most of Your ZX80 could either type it in, or order a ready-made tape from Ken MacDonald of Solihull.

In March, the Sinclair ZX81 was announced by the newly rechristened Sinclair Research, and given an ecstatic welcome by computer enthusiasts. Still with just 1K RAM, and still with that flat touch-sensitive keyboard, it was nevertheless a great leap beyond the ZX80, and furthermore, less expensive, at £49.95 in kit form and £69.95 ready built. It had a much lower chip count, thanks to its own custom chip designed by Sinclair and built by Ferranti, it had a much improved screen display, it could produce graphics, it could do floating point arithmetic - in short it was genuinely useful as a computer rather than the electronic assembly exercise which is how buyers tended to treat the ZX80.

The more the market grew, the more it became only a matter of time before the mighty conglomerate IBM launched its microcomputer. The PC may have been behind-hand compared to companies like Apple and Commodore who were forging ahead in the new industry, but its solid, unexciting specification - Intel's 8086 running at 4.77MHz, a single disk drive, 16K RAM, but all expandable - and an equally solid price of new product, then still unnamed," he remembers. "By Christmas 1980, it was officially the ZX81, and we were wrangling over how many units we thought we could sell. We thought somewhere between 15-30,000 would be about right, and gave Clive an order for 18,000 to put in 15 branches. We ended up selling 450,000 - in the two years of the ZX81's life."

The third PCW show moved to the Cunard International Hotel (now the Novotel) in September. This was the last wholly business/hobbyist PCW show, before the games began to take over.

The 'third wave' of arcade games - Galaxians, Scramble, Defender, Donkey Kong and Pacman - appeared as Space Invaders burnt itself out (the 'first wave' of Ping Pong and BreakOut had taken the arcades by storm in the early to mid-70s). A year or so later, crude variants of these titles formed the raw beginnings of the games we know today.

PisonFounded: October 1980

Pison was set up by David Potter on leaving the teaching staff of Imperial College, London. By 1981, the company was enjoying considerable success repackaging and marketing software programs for the ZX81: Flight Simulation was a huge early seller, followed by Horace Goes Skiing. However, Potter's ambitions lay beyond games and after publishing titles on the Spectrum - Chequered Flag and Scrabble - Pison took on the task of producing the integrated business software for Clive Sinclair's QL machine. It also took time out to produce its consistently highly rated Pison Chess program in 1984.

At the same time, work began at Pison on hardware development, work which saw the light of day as the first Organiser handheld computer in 1985. Since then, Pison has concentrated almost exclusively on hardware development. The Organiser and its successor, the Organiser II, were bought in a variety of consumer and OEM configurations, and were followed in September 1989 by the MC - Mobile Computer - range. Pison is, however, unique as a one-time leisure software publisher which has successfully floated on to the USM of the Stock Exchange.

"We hope to produce at least two new games each month - and all our software will be original rather than versions of existing arcade games." David Lawson, Imagine Software (Popular Computing Weekly, January 6, 1983)

$3,000, plus the IBM name ensured plenty of corporate sales.

1981 saw the first of the truly commercial software houses, ie those with full-time staff, proper offices and advertising budgets. Psion, Bug Byte and Quicksilver laid the way out of the back bedrooms, the last-named run by Nick Lambert and John Hollis, who later took on a certain Rod Couzens to look after the company finances, and indeed, run the company.

Quicksilver produced the first ever Spectrum game, Space Invaders at £5.95, in 1982. Bug Byte spin-off companies such as Software Projects and Imagine went to achieve success of their own (see 1983). Eventually both Bug Byte and Quicksilver went on to become labels of Grandslam Entertainments, while Psion evolved quite differently.

EVENTS

The ZX81 finally made it into W H Smith, the centre piece of a display which included books, magazines and software. The demand was so staggering that WH Smith had to put 500 staff on a crash course to train them to switch it on and run a small program to demonstrate the machine to customers. This was the computer's first real entry into the high street multiples, and it gave home computing some much needed credibility as a leisure pursuit.

On September 26, the first ZX Microfair three open its doors to the public. Held at the Central Hall in Westminster it was attended by several hundred Sinclair devotees. Entry was free of charge. Over in the US, Infocom launched the first Zork adventure for the Apple II.

STORIES

Sinclair suffered its first serious setback when the ZX81 was rejected by the BBC. Initially, the BBC had selected the Newbury Electronics' NewBrain as the nucleus of its forthcoming series on computing; this machine had started life as a Sinclair Radionics project in 1978. Newbury, rather to everyone's surprise, turned the BBC down and the way was left clear for Acorn headed by ex-Sinclair employee Chris Curry, promoting the Atom successor, the Proton, and Sinclair itself, pushing the successor to the ZX81, to compete for the contract.

There simply isn't space here to detail all the backstabbing, foot-shooting and press speculation that accompanied the award of the BBC contract. As everyone knows, the BBC chose Acorn, and the Proton became the BBC Model A micro.

Where are they now? John Hollis/Nick Lambert

In 1984, Argus Press Software bought Quicksilver, a deal which made Lambert and Hollis wealthy enough to warrant tax exile. Both moved to Guernsey, where Hollis still is, with his own company Hollis Research. Hardly idle though - he wrote the ST game, Trackman. Nick Lambert is now back in Southampton. Co-Quicksilver shareholder Rod Couzens set up Electric Dreams Software in September 1985, which later became an affiliate of Activision.

ARRIVALS AND DEPARTURES

Everyone wanted to jump on to the home computer bandwagon in 1982. The Sinclair ZX Spectrum, launched in April, led the pack and heralded the beginning of games computing in the UK. Those machines that followed in its wake had nothing like the brand loyalty that Sinclair had built up from ZX81 days; and most did not noticeably improve on Sinclair's appalling disregard for production schedules.

In comparison, the Commodore 64 could have come from another planet. Its specification, which doesn't look too terrible today, was way ahead of its time, and made visitors to the Third International Commodore Computer show in June, where it was previewed, gasp in astonishment. The 64K memory really was huge at that time, its proper keyboard compared very favourably with the rubber-keyed Spectrum, it had 16 colours and no attribute clash problem, as the Spectrum did, sprite graphics, a 40 column screen and the SID - Sound Interface Chip - built in. But, to begin with, you paid for all that mighty technology: the C64 was launched at £350 at the end of 1982. And no C2N, joysticks or software included, either.

In the UK the Commodore quickly joined the Spectrum as a first choice computer for buyers, without ever outselling it. In the rest of the world it was a different story. The C64 became the world's best-selling computer; in the US it cleaned up. Aggressive price cutting by Commodore, headed by Jack Tramiel, led to a price war and near financial ruin for rival Atari. The Dragon 32, was launched in July and sold in Boots on terms similar to WH Smith's exclusive contract with the Spectrum. Its 32K RAM, graphics and Basic all compared favourably to Sir Clive's beast. The NewBrain, finally saw the light of day, produced by Grundy Business Systems, which had bought the project from Newbury Electronics.

CDS Founded: 1982

In the best British traditions, Ian Williams began by programming for the ZX81 in his back bedroom, notably a game called Castle Adventure. To put the operation on a commercial footing, he took the programs along to his local WH Smith, where the branch manager, Giles Hunter, took such an increasing interest in Ian's CDS Micro Systems that he joined the company as sales manager in July 1983. In December 1983, CDS opened its first shop, in Doncaster - there are now 12 - and a few months later Giles bought Ian Williams out. CDS now employs over 100 people, with interests in full-price and budget software, retailing, distribution, tape and disk duplication, packaging and printing.

The first Japanese home computer to be sold in the UK was the Sord M5, which was really a computer/console hybrid. And let's hear it for the Oric 1, bugs and all, rubber key board and 16K RAM. The Lynx was a Z80-based machine, with some impressively large memory configurations and high resolution graphics, which simply never made it into the high street stores in great enough number to sell. Finally, there was the curious Jupiter Ace, developed by Steven Vickers and Richard Altwasser, who had both been on the Sinclair Spectrum design team. It was another Z80 derivative machine, which is chiefly remembered today as the only home computer to sport Fort as its in-built language. This proved to be its downfall.

Dave Marshall and Rod Swift, like so many others at the time, developed their first program, Fighter Pilot, in their leisure time, transferring skills learnt at the Royal Aircraft Establishment on to the ZX81. Dave now describes Fighter Pilot as 'rudimentary'. It was Night Gunner on the ZX81 which, with sales of over 10,000 through WH Smith, enabled the company to set up on a commercial basis. Both Fighter Pilot and Night Gunner were converted on to the Spectrum in 1983, and Dave and Rod gave up their jobs to go full-time at DI.

EVENTS

In November, Sony launched the 3.5 inch disk drive in the UK. Those of you with 1.44Mb versions may care to note that Sony's original single density drives stored 218K, the double density a 'massive' 437K. Starting price was £235.

January - and the second ZX Microfire. Bursting at the seams with arcade clones, visitors could try out and buy ZX81 titles such as Invaders and 1K Break-Out from flourishing Liverpool publisher Bug Byte, Defender, Invaders, QS Scramble, Asteroids and Galaxians from Quicksilver, Monkey Business from Artic, or 3D Monster Maze from J Gray Software. No prizes for guessing which of these were based on Space Invaders, Pacman, Galaxians, Scramble and Defender.

ARRIVALS AND DEPARTURES

Plenty of new micros lined up at the starting blocks in 1983. The Acorn Electron was announced in January with a scheduled release date in March. It finally rolled out of Acorn over a year later, in May, Memotech, previously a Spectrum alternative keyboard supplier, showed off its Z80-based micro, the Memotech MTX. Mattel announced that the age of its Aquarius would dawn in September. IBM dipped a corporate toe into the home computer market with the PC Jr, 128K RAM and a 5.25" disk drive for $1269. The Coleco Adam was dubbed the 'star' of June's Consumer Electronics show in Chicago, but by Christmas, Coleco was having so many problems with shortages and reports of faulty machines, that it was glad to have the Cabbage Patch doll to fall back on.

A game called Vahalla caught everyone's imagination. Publisher Legend Software claimed it was the "first computer movie", a Norse scenario peopled with 'independent' characters in which the outcome could be different every time. And at £14.95, it was a nice little earner for Legend.

In 1983, software, which had hitherto been dominated by unofficial versions of arcade games, began to diversify. Adventure games like The Hobbit, by Melbourne House, and Level 9's Colossal Adventure and Snowball had significantly improved parsers. Glossoft's Quill became available towards the end of 1983, and

Where are they now?
Commodore Max, Ultimax and Vic 10

Actually these are all one and the same computer, intended as successors to the Vic 20 in the starter computer market. All three incarnations were announced and previewed at shows. The Ultimax version was notable for offering a flat membrane keyboard like that of the ZX81, while the Commodore Max (the latest version) had 2K RAM, and could produce 16 colours on a 320 x 200 screen. It never arrived, and was shortly superseded by prototypes of a 116 and 264, which eventually became the C16 and Plus4.

led to a thriving cottage industry of 'homemade' adventures. It was a good time for UK adventure writers, since Infocom titles, such as the famous Zork series, and adventures by Scott Adams, were not easily available in the UK, and certainly weren't converted for any home-grown machines like the Spectrum.

EVENTS

The PCW show was again at the Barbican, and was the first of the all-screaming whizz-bang games-fests that became the PCW show of the late 80s. Star turns by Imagine and Llamasoft.

Bug Byte, one of the largest and most well-known of the software houses which had grown up around the ZX81 and Spectrum, was going through turbulent times. In January, its head programmer Eugene Evans, and senior staff David Lawson and Mark Butler broke away from the company to form Imagine Software, and its first game, Arcadia, for the Spectrum and Vic.

Mirrorsoft
Founded: November 1983/June 1985

Although Mirrorsoft was set up by Mirror Newspapers' development manager Jim Mackenzie as a feasibility project in November 1983, it did not become a company in its own right until June 1985. Early titles included such educational gems as Caesar the Cat, First Steps with the Men and Quick Thinking (early 1984). Spillies 40 was published in Spring 1984 (I remember the date very clearly, because I spent Easter Monday at the duplicators, desperately trying to fix a bug in it," says Jim).

Mirrorsoft thrived along with neither big hits nor too many grand disasters until it began to make a speciality of the growing 16 bit market in 1987, using its Cinemascope licence as a spring-board. The Mirror Group bought US companies FTL and Spectrum Holobyte (now up for sale again) to add to its software stable, while Mirrorsoft created a new games label, Image Works.

Founded: February 1983

No romantic back bedroom tales here. Virgin Games, set up by Nick Alexander, was a natural expansion for Richard Branson's 13 year old record company, and was set up in a blaze of publicity. The quality of its programs noticeably improved after Virgin set up an in-house programming team, the Gang of Five, in 1984. In 1985, Virgin Games bought out Leisure Genius and its range of licensed board game conversions, and in October 1987, it acquired a stake in Mastertronic, the pioneer budget software house. The takeover was completed a year later to form a new company, Virgin/Mastertronic. The involvement with Mastertronic gave Virgin its first entree into hardware, becoming the sole distributors of the Sega games console range in the UK in November 1987.

THEIR FINEST HOUR

The Battle of Britain

ACE trips the flight fantastic with Lucasfilm's latest historic air combat simulation...

Summer 1940: the future of Britain lies in the hands of a few idealistic, young, but very brave RAF fighter pilots equipped with just 530 fighters up against the might of Hitler's Luftwaffe with over 2030 aircraft. Given the choice which side would you have gone for? Well, with this new Lucasfilm historic flight-simulation you have just that choice, and the chance to fly eight classic aircraft from the period. You could even alter the outcome of the Battle of Britain if you're good enough!

FLIGHT OF FANCY

Their Finest Hour: The Battle of Britain is a classy product from start to finish. The PC version comes

"If the British Empire and its commonwealth last for a thousand years, men will still say: This was their finest hour!"

Winston Churchill, 1940

on four disks with a staggering – and extremely impressive – 200-odd page manual detailing everything you could possibly want to know about the Battle of Britain – the Lucasfilm game and the real thing.

On loading, you're presented with a menu selection screen detailing the game's options: training flight, combat flight, custom mission, play campaign, review combat records, review combat film or exit. Training flight lets you practise flying, shooting and bombing in various situations. Combat flight throws you into one of a possible eight historically-accurate missions for each of the eight aircraft included in the game. If you get bored with the preselected assignments, you can build your own missions using the Mission Builder utility included with the package. Play campaign allows you to take part in several campaign missions. You can also review the combat records of the pilots and crews who have flown on

THEIR FINEST HOUR: THE BATTLE OF BRITAIN

Continuing the historic theme first shown in its earlier Battlehawks 1942 air combat simulation, Lucasfilm has produced a superb flight-sim in Their Finest Hour: The Battle of Britain. Although the control mechanisms aren't that responsive and the PC graphics are slightly jerky, the sheer fun of playing through the numerous captivating missions and the chance to fly eight classic aircraft make this game an attractive purchase for any budding ace.

THE HEROES

Douglas Bader

Bader tragically lost both legs after a plane crash in 1931. However, this handicap didn't prevent him from flying again. From July 1940 to August 1941 Bader chalked up 22 kills until he was shot down over France. Bader spent the rest of the war in German prison camps.

Ernst Udet

Ernst Udet was a brilliant WWI ace with 62 kills. After WWI he became a stunt pilot able to use his wing tip to pluck a handkerchief from the ground. Udet joined the Luftwaffe as a chief test pilot in 1935. After the Battle of Britain Udet's reputation rapidly deteriorated and he committed suicide on November 17th, 1941.

your missions, and review the combat film which you can "shoot" during every mission.

PLANE SAILING

Their Finest Hour lets you fly eight single-seat fighters, double-seat fighters and dive bombers, and medium bombers: Spitfire, Hurricane, Messerschmitt Bf109, Messerschmitt Bf110, Junkers Ju87 Stuka, Junkers Ju88, Dornier 17 Flying Pencil or Heinkel 111 Spade. Each aircraft has its own characteristics, advantages and disadvantages but the general control methods remain the same for all eight.

Easily the most powerful in-flight control feature is the review combat film option. During a mission, you can switch a camera on and record the ensuing action onto "film". You can then playback the results just like a VCR using a comprehensive variety of view modes from the ground, air or even a bomb!

LUCASFILM'S FINEST HOUR

The ACE team are well impressed with this one - it has everything you could possibly want: authenticity, character and most importantly playability and addictiveness. Whether you're a flight-sim fan or not, you can still gain a great deal of absorbing enjoyment from scrambling a Squadron, taking out a few Hun over the English Channel, while managing to return in time for four o'clock tea at Mrs Miggins pie-shop. It's great in-flight entertainment. Check it out.

THE RIGHT STUFF

After a dogfight over the English Channel, Pilot Officer Tony Woods-Scaewen was forced to crash-land his Hurricane on the Isle of Wight, knocking out his front teeth in the process. He then caught a ferry to Southampton, but arrived too late to rejoin his Squadron. He made his way to a bar in a Southampton hotel, had a few drinks and spent the night. The next morning he telephoned his Squadron and told the adjutant, "If you want me to go on fighting, you'd better send someone down here to pay my bill".

Turning inside the enemy

When attacked, German aircraft frequently resorted to flying in a 'defensive circle', if the attacking fighter could turn inside this circle he could bring his guns to bear whilst being in no danger of being fired upon himself.

World War II fighter aircraft

During the 1930s a new generation of warplanes was developed, moving away from the wood and wire biplanes of the First World War and making use of flush-riveted metal stressed skin monocoque construction, retractable undercarriages and enclosed cockpits.

The Messerschmitt Bf 109

The first prototype Bf 109 flew in May 1935 and was powered by a Rolls Royce Kestrel V engine, although the full production version used German made engines. The 109C-3 version had a maximum speed of 348mph at 14,500ft, a wing span of 9.87m and was 8.64m in length. It was armed with two 7.9mm machine guns and two 20mm cannon.

When air flows around an aerofoil it is forced to travel faster over the top surface than the bottom. This creates an area of low pressure above the wing and low pressure below the wing the difference in pressure sucks the wing upwards

BLACK THURSDAY

On August 15th, 1940 a group of Junkers Ju 88s from I/LG 1 used a low-level approach to attack the airfield at Middle Wallop. They arrived so unexpectedly they surprised and all but wiped out 2 British Squadrons on the ground. Only a few Spitfires of 609 Squadron managed to make it airborne while bombs were exploding behind them in the hangars. The day was named "Black Thursday".

THE LEADERS

Hugh Dowding
- RAF Air Chief Marshall

Dowding, a professional serviceman since WWI, was the controversial leader of the RAF during the Battle of Britain. Despite being the central driving force behind the winning RAF campaign, "Stuffy" Dowding was too unconventional a leader for the British top brass, and was subsequently relieved of command on November 25, 1940 - he left the RAF two years later.

Hermann Goering
- Luftwaffe Reichsmarschall

Goering was a WWI flying ace credited with 22 victories and a Blue Max medal for valor. He joined the Nazis in 1922, going on to create the Gestapo, organize Hitler's stormtroopers, set-up the civil concentration camps and head the Luftwaffe. Goering lost Hitler's favours after losing the Battle of Britain and Russian invasion campaigns, and was eventually captured by the Allies on May 8th, 1945. He later committed suicide after being sentenced to death during the Nuremberg trials.

PIC CURVE POWER

The PIC – Predicted Interest Curve – is the most sophisticated reviewing tool around. Here's why...

The curve is divided into six sections, indicating the player's adrenalin level after one minute, one hour, one day, one week, one month, and one year. But this tells you an awful lot more than just what your interest level will be at any given time (although that's obviously important in itself)...

For example, a high one minute rating means that the game must look fantastic and get you all excited from the word go. That means it's probably a good game to show off to the neighbours – after all, they probably aren't going to pay attention for much more than a minute, after which they'll go back to drinking coffee and making rude remarks about 'those awful hostile games the boys play these days'.

The minute, hour, and day ratings can tell you a lot about a game too. If there's a dip here, followed by a rise, you've got a game that may take a bit of getting into – not recommended if you like to get down to something quick and easy. Alternatively, the graphics may put you off for a while until the gameplay starts to grip. Check out the PIC comment for more details.

Finally, you've got the month and year ratings. The better a game holds up here the more deserving it is of your hard earned cash.

PIC curve construction takes a lot of playing on the part of ACE reviewers. PIC curve analysis is an art in itself. The reward is knowing just what you're getting when you make the decision to splash out on Mutant MacDonald Gettysburgers... or F15 Strike Eagle II – just one of this month's excellent examples of today's software technology.

PREDICTED INTEREST CURVE

PICs give you more than a rating – they represent the entire life of a game...yes SIR!

DON'T FORGET THE UPDATES!

Pictionary hits three new formats, plus Fiendish Freddie and Continental Circus on the ST and Psychosis' attractive ball-blasters on the PC. Check out p.123/4.

THE ACE REVIEWING SYSTEM

PIC CURVES

This unique feature to the ACE reviewing system charts the interest level that a game simulates over a period of time. The curve is accompanied by a comment to explain why it's the shape it is. Find out more in the Pic Curve Power panel on this page...

Each review also carries special 'Version Boxes' that give you details of the game's implementation on a specific machine. These boxes include ratings for...

GRAPHICS

All aspects of the game's graphics with the limitations of each machine taken into account. A good-looking Spectrum game will therefore score higher than an average-looking Amiga one.

AUDIO

The music and sound effects are rated here. A high rating is possible on even limited machines like the Spectrum and PC if the computer's shortcomings are cleverly sidestepped.

IQ FACTOR

Yes, sometimes you have to use your brain. This rating evaluates the risk of mental effort – which some people actually enjoy... Note that ACE readers are generally reckoned to be more intelligent than other human beings, so the ratings may be lower than you expect...

FUN FACTOR

Basically a measure of mindless addictiveness. Games like Arkanoïd and Flying Shark require virtually zero brain power but are still remarkably addictive. Most coin-operated slot games are designed for instant satisfaction. Games don't have to be either fun or intelligent – they can be both.

ACE RATING

This is not just plucked out of the air but is calculated from the area under the PIC Curve. To get a really high rating a game will not only have to be very addictive but stand the test of time as well. Just because a game does not get over 500 does not mean we are not recommending it – the following is a general guide to what the ratings mean.

900+ A classic game, recommended without reservation.

800-899 A superb game, but perhaps lacking the long-term depth to last into the month and year categories.

700-799 Still highly recommended, but probably has a couple of aspects to the gameplay that take the edge off it.

600-699 The 'fair zone', where it tends to be very good if you like that sort of thing.

500-599 This still has good things going for it, but the game clearly has some noticeable problems.

400-499 Problems with gameplay and programming make this an inferior game.

300-399 Not only is the gameplay bad but the design was probably flawed in the first place.

100-199 X81 games running on an Amiga.

Under 100 Nothing has ever achieved this appalling level of rating. If anything ever does, it wouldn't even be worth having it for free.

Eugene Lacey is the man who put Britain's top-selling games magazine, C&VG, on the map. Luckily for us, Eugene got fed up with writing for 8-year olds and decided the time had come to tackle the challenge of ACE magazine. As one of Britain's most experienced games journalists, his word is LAW.

Laurence Scottford is ACE's new staff writer – Laurence has been playing games since he was nipper, but some of them we probably ought not to mention. There was not competition for the ACE Staff Writer position from gamers all over the country, but Laurence pipped them all at the post by showing that he could not only push a game to its limit, but he could push a pen too and tell you all about it. Other reviewers include Kati Manza and Gordon Houghton, both of whom used to provide the reviewing talent for 'another magazine' but decided that ACE was worthier of their talents.

TENGEN'S Hard Drivin' managed to go up a gear on its numerous racing rivals in the arcades earlier this year with its realistic handling controls.

Tengen have concentrated their efforts on making the car handle like a true racing simulation – rather than lavishing stacks of code on pretty scenery and background graphics.

The visual effect of this approach is to create a game that looks very simple – basic geometric line drawings and blocky angular shaped vehicles on the road. But what Hard Drivin' may be considered to lack in graphics it more than makes up for in game play.

You are placed at the controls of a super fast sports car competing in a race against several other cars on a choice of two tracks.

The Stunt track features three exciting challenges; the Bridge Jump, Loop-the-Loop, and the Bank. It is also the part of the game where the main thrills and spills are to be had.

Getting the speed and approach right as you go into these stunts is the key to success – and mastering this control will take a good deal of practice.

HARD DRIVIN'

DOMARK put the hammer down

Steering the car in Hard Drivin' also appears quite difficult on the first few attempts – but this is very much by comparison with other racing games that actually operate quite unrealistically under joystick control. Hard Drivin' is much more realistic. If you swing wildly out of control in one direction then in your attempt to right your position you are likely to swing pretty strongly in the opposite direction. Skidding also needs to be mastered if you are to become a skilled Hard Drivin' ace. The skidding is excellent fun and can be used to particular advantage on the Bank.

The computer helps you master the steering and acceleration with a variety of on-screen prompts. Steer wildly out of control and you may find yourself driving down the road in the wrong direction – but the computer points this out to you. Because of the delicacy of the steering a directional arrow moves slightly to the left and right. Keep this centred and you will not go too far wrong.

Another feature there to help you is the action replay sequence. This gives an out of car view of the action (As opposed to your view of the road from the drivers seat, i.e. you are viewing the whole car). Particularly exciting viewing it makes too, especially if you come off the Loop the Loop track at high speed. But it is there for more than mere entertainment – it enables you to try things out and see how the car performs.

A choice of automatic and manual controlled gears are available. The automatic gears enable you to concentrate on the stunts and the race – but once you have become familiar

The main race window features a monochrome display. Despite this the graphics are very detailed and the track moves fast enough to be convincing. It is slightly jerky but this is only to be expected. Greatly to the programmers credit, every single important game play element has been included – right down to the action replay. Once again a Spectrum conversion of an advanced coin-op is pulled off against the odds. First class Spectrum racing.

The tracks are dotted with checkpoints which measure your progress against the game clock. If your speed is good enough you may get a crack at the Phantom Photon (computer controlled car) in a race around the Stunt Track.

The Phantom makes a tough adversary and accelerates away from the start at great speed. Taking him on is for the advanced Hard Drivin' but is a challenge well worth building up to.

ST Version:
Action replay view of the Loop the Loop stunt. The driver lacked sufficient speed to pull it off.

ST version:
Driver's eye view of Loop the Loop. Foot down, deep breath, and close your eyes.

The appeal of Hard Drivin' is in the pure joy of racing along – over taking other cars, and the sensation of speed that is created in the process. The stunts are the icing on the cake, but in the end it's the racing that remains as the main attraction.

Hard Drivin' appears to have an addictive hook that many of the current crop of racing coin-ops lack. Domark have captured the addictive spirit of the game for home consumption. Unputdownable and certain to be the Dom Dom's biggest hit to date – possibly even pipping all the other Christmas racers to the number one slot.

BRUCE LEE LIVES!

SOFTWARE TOOLWORKS bring the muscle-bound hero of Chinese kung-fu revenge movies back from the dead – and give him artificial intelligence to boot.

SOFTWARE Toolworks certainly can't be accused of putting out programs that look similar, however. Last time out came Life and Death – the game when you were trying to cure people. Now Bruce Lee Lives, where you are trying to kick their heads in. Naturally Bruce is the good guy, trying to defeat the assorted forces of Master Po. But I'll tell you this – it's not easy.

The martial arts bit itself is quite straight forward, with about 15 sensibly positioned moves – activated either by joystick or keyboard, with or without fire/shift pressed. One particularly nice bit is the fact you can program a series of three selected moves into a 'macro' – activated by a single keystroke during the combat sequences. This can be quite useful.

First it's into the training room to practice your skill on the punch bag. You'll find this vital if you are to get through the initial testing stages. No 'straight into the action' stuff here – you first have to prove your worth in the qualifying rounds. This is not a simple workout – from the very beginning the program starts to show its well concealed teeth. Because it learns.

Remember back in the old days, when you used to be able to find a series of moves that always, always, always used to take the opposition out? Bruce Lee Lives just won't stand for that sort of crap. The blurb claims that it identifies moves and sequences that you commonly use – then adapts its tactics accordingly – up to the point of using your particularly good sequences back on you!

First off, I tried using the repeated jump kick – and was pretty successful. 'Ah so' methinks – this learning business is a pile of doggy. Next qualifying round, tried again. Got beaten to a pulp. Tried again – serious intensive care needed. Surely some coincidence.

A trip back to the gym quickly installed a new jump kick, low kick, jump kick sequence – then back to the qualifying. This worked a lot better immediately...until the second round. Pass the plasma please, Vicar. Take it from me, the program is smart!

Having got through the qualifying rounds, you go on to a number of missions of increasing difficulty, ending with a final confrontation with Master Po himself. You can only take on a harder mission, though, when you have completed the ones before it.

One point, your energy does replenish at a slow but constant rate while fighting – but there again, so does that of your opponent. Here I found the single glitch I could complain of – you can get into a repetitive sequence of punching each other, when very close together. Neither of you inflict damage, but your opponent will not back off if you carry on punching, he'll just punch back.

You can use this to take a breather if you are hopelessly behind in a bout and recover all your lost stamina. OK, so will your opponent, but he never goes beyond 100%, so you soon catch up.

This learning thing has to be the main challenge to the game, in all honesty. The graphics are fine, but not stunning – unlike a EA's Bodokan to be reviewed next month – and although there is a story line to it, there is no variation in the weapon types or disciplines used.

But despite that, however, it is highly playable and will present you more of a challenge than the run of the mill beat-'em-up plus it will certainly retain your interest for longer. On that premise alone, it's well worth a look.

WONDER BOY III

Hack'n'slay with cutie power on the SEGA.

WONDER Boy is back in his third incarnation, once again bringing the art of the silly sprite to the Sega. As with the other Wonder Boy titles you play the adolescent hero as he carves his way through various baddies (none of whom look in the least bit threatening), in a platform based action adventure.

Wonder Boy confronts the evil fire-breathing dragon. Even if he manages to defeat the monster all will not be well. The dragon has something nasty up its scaly sleeve.

This time you begin your adventure as per any day of the week. You know, it's the usual monster hacking routine (no sweat). But things start to go wrong when you come across the nasty old Dragon. When (and if) you manage to mortally wound him he throws a horrible curse and turns you into Lizard Man (yuk!). Which only goes to prove what you suspected all along — Dragons are really bad losers.

Well, no use crying over spilt milk — you're a lizard now and you're going to have to work out how to regain your normal form. It isn't all bad news, however, you do look very cute as a Lizard (honestly, it suits you). Even so, you'll probably not want to stay that way for too long.

The answer lies in a magical item known as the Salamander Cross (no, not an award for heroic lizardry but the only thing that can restore you to normality [normality?!]). The rest of the game concerns your quest for the said

Cross, and involves the usual buzz with a whole host of colourful nasty critters.

The game is quite enjoyable to play and has some nice touches. The sprites are fun and well animated (look out especially for the way Wonder Boy himself skids to a halt when you stop. The scenery features are very good too, like the giant springs which launch Wonder Boy/Lizard Man onto higher platforms. Good arcade adventure fare for the committed...

GHOSTBUSTERS

The classic spook license now haunts SEGA...

IT'S always a rather pleasant surprise when a film tie-in turns out to be a good game. Such was the case with the original Ghostbusters game, released way back in 1984. Activision, the company responsible for the title, chose to concentrate on the more obvious action sequences from the film rather than worrying too much about a subtle plot. This approach seems to have worked well.

The game on the Sega plays much the same as it did on the original computer versions. You begin with a small amount of cash with which you can buy a basic ghostbusting vehicle and equip it with the essential pieces of equipment needed to go out and bag ghosts. Once you have kitted up, it's time to drive off and nab some nasties.

In the first section of the game proper you are presented with a map of the city. The Gatekeeper and The Master of the Key are both wandering around. If they happen to meet and make their way to Zuul, then things start getting nasty. Meanwhile, you guide your ghostbusters symbol around the streets touching the ghosts before they accumulate and form Marshmallow man.

In the second section of the game in which you have an overhead view of your ghostbusting vehicle driving through the streets. You must avoid other traffic, while sucking up the passing ghosts with your ghost vacuum. Once you arrive at the infested building you enter the section of the game which actually requires some sort of skill. Here you must manoeuvre your ghostbusters with their ghost trap and ion beams to capture all of the ghosts floating in front of the building. If you fail to trap them all you will be slimed. Ugh. Your ultimate aim is to build up enough points to enter Zuul before the city's PK energy gets too high. Then you can sneak past the Marshmallow man for your final confrontation with Gorza.

The appeal of Ghostbusters really lies in the sheer variety of the gameplay, even though some of the sections are ridiculously simple. As an added attraction, the better you do, the more complex and useful the equipment you can buy. This feature is likely to keep you coming back to the game, even after you have played it several times.

SWITCHBLADE

GREMLIN's little Cyber Knight goes forth into arcade adventure land

THE cyber world of Thraxx is about to enter a new era of darkness and despair. The dark lord of nightmares, Havok, having slept for 10,000 years has finally woken. The Fireblade has been broken, and it's sixteen pieces scattered through the underworld where Havok now reigns. The slaughter has begun, and all of the Bladeknights, hi-tech warriors of Thraxx are dead. All that is, except one. The last of the Cyberknight's, Hiro, is Thraxx's last hope.

Harrowing stuff isn't it? You, naturally enough, play the hero Hiro (sorry about that), in this platform based arcade adventure with beat-em-up elements. Your task is to search the undercity for the sixteen pieces of the Fireblade. Once you have collected them all you will be ready for your final confrontation with Havok.

During your search you will have to tackle the many evil creations of Havok. To begin with you have a basic series of punches and kicks to defend yourself with. Fortunately for you, your Cyber Arm is reprogrammable. Yes folks, that means Power Ups, and lots of 'em. Rather than have a whole gamut of complicated joystick moves for each offensive movement you must use a power bar (a la R-Type) to gauge the strength and type of each punch/kick you make. This depends on the length of time that you hold down the fire button.

Make short stabs at the button and you will throw light punches. These are quick, but not very powerful, so you will have to keep punneling away at your opponents for quite some time before they disappear in a puff of pixels. Hold the button down for long enough however and you will execute a perfect sweeping kick - powerful enough to dispatch most bad guys with one blow.

The actual display shows only the areas you have already explored. Any areas you have not yet entered are initially dark. This makes the whole task of exploring the complex a lot more interesting. Often areas are accessible only after you have smashed your way through a crumbling wall, so it pays to be thorough. This is especially the case with regards to power-ups and bonuses, which are frequently hidden behind crates.

If he's quick enough, Hiro can grab the crystal above him for a bonus.

Graphically, Switchblade is quite nice. The sprites are not that large, but this does allow for a larger playing area. There are also some fairly tuneful ditties playing alongside the usual spot effects. Gameplay seems to be pitched just about right as well. The combat method works well, and allows you to get straight into the game without having to absorb half-a-dozen impossible controls. Well worth a look - there should be something here to satisfy most people.

ONSLAUGHT

Colourful battle-lust from the berserkers at HEWSON

WHEN you've had one of those really hard days at work, everything that can go wrong has gone wrong, and you're just about ready to explode, there's nothing better than taking on a whole army single-handedly and having a good hack for half an hour or so. Let me tell you, it's a really good way to shift that old tension headache. Just in case you haven't got a few friends handy who are willing to be hacked about a bit, Hewson have come up with the perfect solution - Onslaught.

If, like me, you have always thought that conventional wargames were a bit dry (my apologies to all those hard core table top war enthusiasts out there), then Onslaught is the game for you. It is based around the mythical land of Gargore. A land peopled by war-like tribes, each of whom worships one of the many gods (all neatly explained in the rather detailed manual). You play a lone warrior, also a follower of one of these gods, who sets out to conquer the entire land (ambitious eh?).

There are several phases to the game. The first presents you with a square battle map, divided into a grid with each cell representing either a kingdom, a temple, or a landscape unit. Landscape units are shown as mountains, water, and so on. You cannot cross these unless you have collected the relevant magical charm, available at certain later stages of the game. By moving the cursor over an adjacent enemy kingdom you are shown an information panel giving you the alignment, type, strength, and so on of the people who reside there. If

ed. These are set against equally brilliant background graphics and a colourful, graduated sky, which obviously involves some pretty intensive palette switching.

You begin at the far left of the battle field and must slash and hack your way through the enemy forces to reach the opposite side of the field. It's not just a case of ploughing your way through however, for if you let too many of the enemy get past you then you will lose the battle. To start with you are armed only with a mace, but as you kill your opponents they leave shields behind which can be collected to gain more powerful weaponry. Selecting weapons can prove a little tricky in the heat of battle. Fortunately, there is a tutor mode that automatically collects and selects weapons for you. The only disadvantage with this mode of play is that your score is never entered on the hi-score table.

The second stage, siege, is much like the first only you actually enter the enemy's fortifications. The third stage, mind battle, is a sub game in a completely different style, it supposedly represents the psychological battle between you and the enemy leader. This involves moving a cursor around a weird looking head with flailing arms, and firing at it, while avoiding return missiles, and collecting bonuses. The same section is also used if you attack a temple. Should you win this last stage, then you have successfully conquered that kingdom.

As you slowly conquer kingdoms on the battle map you will also have to contend with plague and rebellions, making it just as difficult to keep kingdoms under you as it is to gain them in the first place.

Onslaught is a superbly presented game, with a lot to it. It is quite enjoyable to play, but the method of selecting weapons and the over busy on-screen action can make it difficult to keep pace with the game. This is a shame, as it flaws an otherwise excellent product. I also suspect that conquering kingdoms could become a bit monotonous after a while. Having said that, if you enjoy a bit of frantic Hack 'n' Slay, then this is definitely the game for you.

Our hero is about to be impaled by a passing charger. While he's dying there's time to admire the colourful sky. Which, incidentally, can be edited by the player you now press the fire button you can attempt to conquer them.

Conquering kingdoms is the main, meaty part of the game, and is achieved in three stages: field battles, sieges, and mind battles. The first two are quite similar and are the best parts of the whole. When you first see the graphics for these stages you are going to be absolutely gobsmacked. You are presented with a sideways scrolling view of your warrior battling, claw and tooth, with the opposing army. The sprites are absolutely first class. Incredibly detailed, and extremely well-animated.

Initial high expectations are not disappointed. I'm not convinced it has staying power though.

FUTURE WARS

PALACE SOFTWARE import a great Gallic graphic adventure.

ADVENTURES have seen something of a revival recently – but not, perhaps, in the way that many old adventure die-hards might have hoped for. The text adventure seems to have finally died a death (at least in the sense that none of the larger commercial software houses cater for this format any more). When a company like Level 9 (having already made a concession to graphics fans), packs its bags and moves on from a genre it has been renowned for, then you know that change is in the air.

There has been a noticeable move towards more complex graphics, and simpler, though more sophisticated, ways of interacting with the machine than was afforded by some of the early adventure classics. This is, perhaps, not surprising, given the widespread availability of machines like the ST and Amiga which both boast a powerful processor, large amounts of memory and easily accessed graphical front ends.

Companies like Sierra-On-Line have led the way forward with celebrated titles such as Lessure Suit Larry, Police Quest, and Space Quest. These are all distinguished by their heavy reliance on detailed background graphics, animated sequences, and the use of the mouse for movement and selection of many of the commonly used functions like saving and loading games. The Sierra games never completely divorced themselves from text input however, and although they all use an extremely advanced parser, which does make things easier, you still have to make the machine understand what you want to do through typed phrases.

At first sight, this new graphic adventure from French developers Delphine Software looks quite a bit like the Sierra adventures. But the resemblance is only superficial. An immediately noticeable difference is the superiority of both the graphics and sound effects. They are not just good, they're first class. Much the same goes for the animated sequences which occur at particular points throughout the game. Attention to detail, especially in the presentation, is found throughout.

Impressive isn't it? This is just the opening location, and there's plenty more where that came from.

For example, rather than captions, text boxes, and menus blocking out huge areas of the screen, they are presented as white text on a translucent grey background, a la Channel 4. This way, you can still see the graphics beneath them.

Movement is achieved by moving the pointer to your planned destination and clicking the mouse button. The hero, an office window cleaner, then attempts to walk towards the spot you have indicated. When you come to give him other instructions you discover the beauty and economy of the Cinematique system that has been used to create the game – no text entry!

By clicking the left mouse button you call up a menu of standard adventure commands: EXAMINE, TAKE, INVENTORY, USE, OPERATE, and SPEAK. Once you have selected the option you require, you move the pointer to the person or object you wish to apply the command to. For instance – if, in a standard text adventure, you would type 'OPEN BLUE DOOR', with Cinematique you would select OPERATE, then move the pointer over the blue door and click.

There are several advantages to this system. Firstly, there is no fiddling about trying to find just the right word to use, secondly, unless you're a touch typist, this method is much quicker. Another benefit that is probably not immediately apparent is that there are a limited number of combinations of commands and objects/people, so even if you cannot solve a problem logically, you can probably do it eventually through trial and error. (I can see purists turning the page in disgust!) This does mean that this adventure is likely to prove a lot less frustrating than most, especially for novice adventurers.

The actual plot concerns the thwarting of alien plans to disrupt history making their conquest of Earth in the 43rd Century inevitable. You have been unwittingly drawn into this rather messy state of affairs. You find yourself being dragged through several time zones in an attempt to put a stop to the diabolical machinations of the aliens. This provides plenty of opportunity for far varied graphical locations and problems, that should be enough to keep most people happy for some time.

Although I can see that Future Wars might not appeal to adventure purists, it does succeed in making the genre accessible to a lot more people. It is certainly an enjoyable, well-presented product with a lot of depth, and I wholeheartedly recommend it if you fancy an adventure that is a little different.

BATTLE SQUADRON

from ELECTRONIC ZOO.

IF there's one word that sends Amiga-owning shoot 'em up freaks into an apopleptic seizure, it's Hybris. Released near the beginning of last year, Discovery Software's US imported blaster did for the Amiga shoot 'em up what F/A-18 Interceptor had done for the Amiga flight sim – mainly because at the time there were no decent quality blasts about, apart perhaps from Sidewinder and Xenon.

Such was the critical success of Hybris, a follow-up was inevitable – and here it is. It's not an official sequel – there's no Hybris II subtitle or anything like that. But it's by Martin Pedersen and Torben Larsen, the team behind the original, and after one look at the game there's no denying the similarities. In practical terms, Battle Squadron is really Hybris 1990 – a 12" remix of the original, with Martin and Torben taking the original formula and giving the graphics, sound and gameplay and elaborate overhaul.

The most notable new inclusion is the simultaneous two-player option that seems sadly lacking in many shoot 'em up these days. Fight the good fight together with your mate to make the task that much easier – and enjoyable. There's a level of healthy competition produced as a result – you're a team when it comes to killing the alien peril, but as soon as a weapon capsule is released, it's every man for himself.

And talking of extra weapons... There are 25 in total. Remember in Hybris, how the weapon was upgraded through a series of stages? Well that's how it works here, but there are four separate and upgradable 'base' weapons, each represented by a different colour capsule. There's not too much difference in style or performance, and it all comes down to personal taste which is the best weapon, but check out the Magma Waves for some wholesale destruction. And of course there's a complement of smart bombs for when the going gets tough.

Each level is broken down into two halves – the first takes place above the planet surface, where the aliens thankfully aren't too nasty, while the remainder is fought out underground, in the planet's subterranean caverns. This is where things get sticky as the huge stationary aliens that were such a pain in Hybris make a comeback – but this time they're bigger and beefier. Look out for the gargantuan Venus Flytraps!

Of course the end-of-level baddies are back, but they're badder and more vicious than ever. This time around it's not just a matter of pumping them full of lead – most of them have to be taken apart piece by piece in the correct order.

As sequels go, Battle Squadron does the job – the programmers could have copped out and done a few measly extra levels, but the complete facelift that's been done here means you've got a whole new shoot 'em up that still manages to retain the winning feel of the original. It's tough – at least as tough as Xenon II – but a moderator screen provided that allows you to ss around with numbers of lives, alien speed, extra weapons and so on to give you a head start.

Aesthetically it's a winner – a real improvement over the original with bigger, badder nasties and – something which Hybris lacked – proper varied landscapes. Check out the mechanical level for some jaw-dropping effects!

Scorching action from the programmers of Hybris.

All in all, Battle Squadron must go into the top three Amiga shoot 'em ups, along with Xenon II and Silkworm – not to be missed.

An excellent soundtrack comprising a plethora of themes and jingles does the business, and graphically there's little to touch it. THE THIRD COURIER

Berlin sounds like an exciting place these days. A quick visit with a hammer to chip a block off the Iron Curtain for posterity, a few free beers from emotional innkeepers, flowers from ecstatic passers-by, in fact just the place for a holiday if you fancy seeing history unfold before your eyes.

On a rather different level, Berlin is also the scene of Accolade's latest offering. It's a strange experience to wander up and down the Ku'damm in the game while simultaneously watching a TV program featuring hordes of tired and emotional Germans tumbling down the same street. With such strong competition from current events, can the game hold its own?

TTC takes place in the old Berlin and the Wall is most definitely in place. The program gives you the opportunity to create a number of Agent files, each of which effectively defines a player character who may then be 'activated' to enter the scenario. Your objective is to recover stolen NATO defence plans before they can be sold to the Russians by an apparently defecting Western agent.

Each time you play you can select any one of your filed agents and 'activate' him (or her). Relevant characteristics include the standard RPG-style attributes, but these have a rather subtle effect on the action during the game. What's most important is your ability (or otherwise) to handle a gun and your current potential for healthy living, both of which determine how long you're likely to survive constant attacks by panhandlers, muggers, drunks, and assassins.

You start the game in your apartment. The display shows your current location: there are three categories of location display rather as in The Bard's Tale series. Interiors of shops and apartments are revealed as single flip-screen rooms. Exteriors scroll towards you with a perspective view each time you move, and there are also the equivalent of 'dungeons'—sparsely detailed perspective interiors that scroll in a similar fashion.

As the Iron Curtain is swept aside, ACCOLADE plunge you back into the Cold War. NATO plans are missing, and it's up to you to create an RPG-style character and get after them...

Encounters involve the relevant assassin or colleague appearing as a detailed figure superimposed on the current location graphic. A description of the encounter is flashed up, and if things turn nasty you'll be keeping a close eye on your character attributes on the right of the screen. It doesn't take many shots from a policeman's NATO rifle to get the health down to zero.

Commands are all menu-driven but the design of the menus can mean some rather tiresome multiple selections for frequently needed options. For example, confronted by a policeman demanding your papers, you have to ACTION, USE, US PASSPORT every time. Adding in an ENCOUNTER menu could cut this and other hassle factors down considerably.

This may seem like a small problem, but it's compounded by the game's most serious design flaw: over-frequent and uninteresting encounters. While you explore the city, you're constantly challenged by police who only want to see your papers. In the end it becomes so tiresome that it becomes a real disincentive to further movement. Other encounters are just as dull and after being told to get lost by the nth identical looking barman in the nth identical looking bar, you're looking up at the shelf for something else to play.

Your search for the NATO plans involves similar repetitive gameplay as you question everyone you meet (almost always with identical, uninteresting consequences) and explore all possible locations, most of which look exactly the same. Back in your apartment your computer occasionally drops heavy hints in the form of e-mail from your superiors. After solving the first puzzle (with a sense of relief rather than achievement) I returned to the house to find that the solution was practically handed to me on a plate by my boss.

As you move along the street, different categories of establishment are flagged by icons at the bottom of the screen: a bar to your left, for example, or a hotel to your right. Unfortunately all bars look the same from the outside (as do all other building categories) so you have to visit each and every one in your quest. This soon becomes rather tedious since the rewards are not numerous enough to compensate for the disappointments.

Things do hot up later on as you get further into the case, but it is a tremendous struggle against the impulse to reset the machine to get this far.

The Third Courier is a disappointment. A slick user interface conceals what, essentially, a very simple game mechanic which lacks variation in gameplay and ultimately fails to raise the adrenalin levels. Great body, shame about the brain.

● See p.143 for release details.

The original Leisure Suit Larry was a milestone in computer gaming: it was one of the first titles to achieve significant penetration of the PC-compatible market and was partly responsible for software houses in the UK launching their attack on PC owners.

The formula for all the games is pretty simple. Fat, balding programmer Al Lowe has created his on-screen persona Larry Laffer to pursue his male fantasies in the form of a stable relationship with a good-looking gal. Although many felt didn't live up to the promise of LSL1. In this new title the humour is more subtle, the locations more interesting, the animation more polished, and the story-line more absorbing. Throughout the game a series of excellent animated cameos include seeing little sheets of paper slip through photo-copiers, being beaten up by your boss, longing for Passionate Patti in the piano bar of the Casino, and seeing several women in various states of undress.

Watch out – he's back! SIERRA-ON-LINE's animated nerd with an insatiable desire for romantic encounters is once again in pursuit of a mate. This time, he's after Passionate Patti, who's got a thing about Pulsating Pectorals. Is this really just 'good clean fun', we wonder...

Larry's a one-woman man, however, he can only achieve this status by flirting with every lady he meets, and so far the games have ensured that he meets quite a few.

It's this last bit that makes up the first of the reservations. Previous LSL titles have been entirely innocuous in their pandering to male fantasies, but LSL3 definitely goes one step further and introduces graphics that are obviously designed to be as seductive as pixels can be. This may be easy on the eye, but it's also undeniably exploitative of women's bodies in ways that the earlier games weren't. If that sort of thing bothers you (and I'm not overstating this – the game has very clear mild pornographic tendencies) then the experience is going to be marred as a result.

Another weak-

ENCOUNTERS	70
Lots of them, including some that might be considered in mildly dubious taste. It would be nice if Sierra could beef up the conversations though.
CHALLENGE	80
Easy to get into, but you spend a lot of time covering the same ground. Most of the puzzles are solvable by examining everything in sight.
SYSTEM	80
Stick animated adventuring with occasional lapses of speed. Powerful PC system recommended.

ACE RATING 890

Leisure Suit Larry has become almost a legendary figure in PC gaming. This latest title confirms his...er...missionary status. It's a pity, however, that the series seems to be heading towards increased female nudity.

need a fast PC with EGA or VGA to get the best out of them. On a bog standard machine, many of the animated sequences are so slow as to be painful. This game isn't as bad as some of the earlier titles (Kings Quest IV in particular) but the speed still aggravates sometimes. It's also questionable whether text entry is really suitable for this sort of game: speed of interaction might well be improved with a menu-driven command system.

LSL3 is, despite its shortcomings, a very enjoyable romp and possibly the best of the Larry games to date. Let's hope we don't have to wait too long for the next one...

● See p.143 for release details.

LEISURE SUIT LARRY III

After his initial success in LSL1, Larry kicked off LSL2 by losing, in the first scene, his conquest of the previous game. He then finds true love on a Pacific Island, but in this latest title the same thing happens all over again. Life with Larry is obviously not a bed of roses, so our anti-hero is forced to abandon his flowery Bermuda pants, don once again his appallingly tasteless leisure suit, and set out on the search for a new companion in the island paradise of Nontoonyt.

With one or two reservations, it's heartening to report that LSL3 is definitely quite a lot more enjoyable than the last game, which ness in the game concerns the way events are handled by the plot. For obvious reasons, certain things have to happen in sequence, but at the same time it's clearly an advantage to allow the player to wander around as freely as possible. This means that you often attempt to carry out an action, only to be told that you can't do it 'now' but you might like to try again 'later'. This clumsiness was a feature of several early text adventures and nowadays game designers usually find a way round it – in this case Sierra haven't.

The only other criticism is one that applies to all Sierra games, and that's that you really

This doe-eyed lady is more interested in 'mailing' and souvenirs than in your body. Tough luck...

MYTH

SYSTEM 3 weaves 8-bit magic

IT is very easy, when you have become used to the sort of quality and presentation usual in the best 16-bit games, to dismiss new 8-bit products as inferior titles designed to run on inferior machines. It is also easy to believe that computers like the ZX Spectrum and Commodore 64 have already been pushed to the limit. There has been some very impressive software developed for both of these machines in their long existence. Many programmers have found ingenious ways to get around both machines' idiosyncrasies. So surely nobody is going to get anything more out there? Wrong! System 3 have done just that, with Myth.

The idea is that one of the gods, Dameron, has rebelled and begun to change history. It is forbidden for any of the good gods to intervene directly in the course of history, so they assign a mere mortal (that's you matey!) to travel through several time zones in order to put things right, and ultimately face Dameron himself. The zones you must travel through are Hell, Ancient Greece and the Halls of the Medusa, Ancient Norse, and Ancient Egyptian eras.

In each zone you must complete certain tasks in the correct order to restore the natural course of history and then go forward to the next zone. Unfortunately for you there are a number of creatures and traps in each section which, unless dealt with carefully, will thwart your progress.

To defend yourself against them you initially have nothing but your fists, but other weapons can be collected as the game goes on. The idea is that, as the planned confrontation with Dameron gets nearer, your powers become more and more god-like.

The game itself is essentially a two-dimensional scrolling game with platform elements. Now hold on there, before you turn the page, this isn't just any old platform game, it's the best I've ever come across, and I've played a few platform games I can tell you. So what really makes Myth stands out from the crowd?

Well, the first thing that strikes you is the quality of the animation. You've never seen anything like this on either the Spectrum or the C64. Each figure in game is a life of its own. Forget stiff walks, unrealistic jumps, and unconvincing combat — you won't find any of those in this game. Every sprite from the beginning of the game to the end is captivating. As if that wasn't enough, just wait until you start moving the central character. The degree of control that System 3 has managed to squeeze out of the humble joystick is quite incredible. You'll really enjoy the way you can finely adjust your jumps and leaps, or the way you can duck and weave with the sword when you are tackling enemies.

The quality of the graphics alone would be enough to recommend this game, but there are yet more goodies in store. There is enough variety here to keep even the most easily bored person going. Each section has a very different feel to it, creating its own very special atmosphere. Take, for instance, the vicious lightning while you are fighting aboard a Viking boat in the Ancient Norse era, or the gloomy, echoing halls of Medusa in the Ancient Greek era, both extremely good effects (better executed than anything I have seen in a similar vein). Then there is the way that weapons and items you collect must be used at the correct time and in the right way to complete each section (so you can't just hack your way through). The final confrontation is also very surprising, but you are going to have to find out about that for yourself. Add to this a tremendous soundtrack and spot effects, and you have one of the best 8-bit games ever created.

● Laurence Scofford

Oh dear! It looks as if you have been caught between the devil and the deep blue sea.

C64 VERSION

To be perfectly honest with you, I've not seen anything as accomplished as this on the humble Spectrum. Having seen the game on the C64 first, I would have expected the programmers to have copied out on this version, and gone for the usual monochrome screens. Not so — not only have they used all the available colours (yes, all eight of them), but I challenge you to discover any major attribute clash. In case you don't know the Spectrum that well, let me tell you, using lots of colour in a game of this type and managing to avoid attribute clash is not only very difficult, it's near impossible.

But, disregarding the tremendous technical achievement, there is just as good a game here as there is in the C64 version. Gameplay is slightly different, mainly in the way that puzzles are solved and each section is finished, but the atmosphere and variety is still there.

The only thing we couldn't check was the soundtrack, which has yet to be implemented, but the all of the other elements were complete and extremely impressive. If you are a Spectrum owner you should buy this game. The chances are you won't come across a better product for your machine.

TURBO OUTRUN

US GOLD goes back to the long and winding road with a sequel that's been widely awaited in the hope that it improves on the original!

APES evolved into humans, woolly mammoths evolved into elephants and OutRun evolved into Turbo OutRun. And somehow I don't think that Sega's classic rubber burner got the best deal.

Sega's pioneering racer had everything: cars, girls, sun, surf and a beach-bopping soundtrack. The sequel had everything too – the only trouble was that it was the same everything. Any additions that were made to the second version were at best cosmetic and at worst a detriment to the gameplay: the Turbo button actually made the flashing Ferrari more difficult to handle, while the changing backdrops hardly made an ounce of difference to the action.

Drive that car...downhill.

The fact is that the original OutRun is one of those games that simply can't be bettered – in the arcades at least – so a sequel hasn't just got a tough act to live up to, it's got an impossible challenge ahead of it. But as far as the home computer conversions go, at least this second stab gives US Gold a chance to make amends for the dismal quality of the original effort.

Unfortunately though, that chance has been wasted. Programmed by I.C.E. (surely in this case it can't stand for In Car Entertainment?), this suffers from all of the original's faults and adds a few for good measure. The most immediately off-putting feature is the awful visual style: the cars and backdrops are irritatingly two-dimensional, creating no feeling of depth – but there's acute attention to detail in the roadside signs! What a weird sense of priorities!

And to cap it all, there's a massive wait between levels while the program loads the next chunk, which is unforgivable in this day and age and also serves to make the gameplay even more 'stop-start' than it already is.

Turbo OutRun has nothing new to offer and doesn't even retread the old ground to any great effect. There was never a great deal of potential in this unnecessary sequel, but I.C.E.'s version has made the worst of a bad job. It's filled the petrol tank with sugar – and failed to sweeten the pill.

GHOULS 'N' GHOSTS

Grave goings on at US GOLD

GHOULS 'N' GHOSTS

is the sequel to Capcom's cutest game ever – Ghosts and Goblins. It played like a Grimm Brothers' fairy tale and was the cutest thing you ever saw. Complete with a knight in shining armour, a princess to be rescued, magic spells, and spooky zombies and ghouls welling up out of the grave yard.

At first glance the sequel looks very much like the original – but it is actually a good deal tougher. Five levels of difficulty before you confront Lucifer in the final show down, where you can rescue the princess, may not sound like much – but once you start losing knights before getting anywhere to speak of on the first level, you soon see that you are up against one tough game.

The giant golden lion bars the knight's entry to level 3. He is difficult to kill because of his habit of leaping all over the screen.

You begin your quest armed with an unlimited amount of darts that you use to take out the various nasties that confront you as you dash from left to right. The weapon can be exchanged for an axe, time bomb, shield, or knife by grabbing the power ups that appear in the occasional treasure chest.

One of the best power ups to get is the magic suit of armour which gives your knight temporary invincibility, but caution needs to exercised with the treasure chests. Instead of a power up, certain treasure chests contain a magician who pops up and turns you into a duck – which is no joke when you've got a princess to rescue and half a dozen zombies racing behind you.

If you survive the guillotines and manage to see off the mad boxer mid-way through level one you will come up against the first end-of-level nasty – a long-necked demon with a seemingly insatiable appetite for your arrows or axes. If you get the better of him he drops the key to the next level.

The next challenge is more of a platform test than the shoot 'em up nature of the first Pump the giant knight full of flak until he drops the key. This opens the door to level 2.

The key's yours. Watch out – level 2 is even nastier!

PREDICTED INTEREST CURVE

Tough arcade conversion that will take considerable time to master.

ATARI ST VERSION

Very bright and colourful graphics are enhanced by the use of a black background. The game is very similar to the Capcom coin-op. Fast and unforgiving in its game play. Good use of sound effects and a suitable tune make for a first rate ST arcade game.

one. A series of intricate rope bridges have to be negotiated – without falling through the various holes that appear should you place your knight's foot on a rickety section of ladder. You won't actually fall that far – just below you is a pit complete with giant snails and other ghastly creepy crawlies, all crying out for lunch. Jumping out of the pit back onto the rope bridge requires very deft use of the joystick – you have to jump slightly upwards and then quickly change direction to enable your knight to secure his footing on the pit that is constantly moving.

If you survive this level and make progress in the following three you will begin to appreciate the fact that success depends on speed. The knight needs to be constantly moving forward – not just to avoid the ghouls and other nasties that are constantly welling up out of the ground, but also because there is a time factor to be taken into account. Daily too long on any level and you are likely to be told that you have "Run out of time".

It is the graphics that set Ghouls 'n' Ghosts a good few degrees above the dozens of 'rescue the princess' arcade adventures that have done the rounds. The detail of the knight and of the zombies and ghouls, their movements, and the backgrounds make for a very pretty arcade game. It turned heads when it appeared in the arcades and appears to be converted to a high graphical standard in all of the home versions ACE has seen.

But this cuteness should not blind gamers to the toughness of the challenge provided by Ghouls 'n' Ghosts. This is not for the uninitiated. You will find it addictive and enjoyable but be prepared to invest a goodly number of days – even weeks – of gameplay if you are serious about defeating Lucifer and rescuing the princess.

● Eugene Lacey

Don't stand and fight – this mad boxer in the middle of level one is tougher than any of the end-of-level nasties. So scarper...

MOONWALKER

Wacko Jacko's soft shoe shuffle put US GOLD in the limelight.

MICHAEL Jackson's launch on computer had all of the razzamatazz that you would expect to be associated with the world's number one pop music megastar.

US Gold did Jacko proud in the hype department with a mega bash at London's trendy Limglight Club. There was booze and food in abundance, dancing till dawn, a cabaret spot by Rik Mayall, and even a Michael Jackson look-a-like doing his stuff on stage for the hundreds of reviewers, distributors, retailers, and buyers who crammed in to the nightclub for the best PR do at the PC Show.

Whilst all this partying was going down, Emerald Software were putting the finishing touches to the game across the Irish Sea in Wexford.

Their brief was to follow the Moonwalker film as closely as possible – not easy when you consider quite how ludicrous the storyline is. Get this: MJ is trapped in a maze and must find eight pieces of a bunny rabbit suit before hopping on a motorbike, whizzing through a city destroying bags of drugs, shooting it out with Mr 'Drugs Baron' Big's Storm Troopers in a night club, and finally rescuing Katy, the little girl who has been kidnapped by the drug dealers. It all ends with a shoot out in Mr Big's compound where Jacko has to destroy his giant laser cannon before turning into a space ship and shooting off to the stars where, presumably, he belongs.

This far fetched derring-do doesn't matter a jot in the film as it merely serves as a platform for the spectacular song and dance routines. Computer entertainment has got a long way to go before it can rival the best of Hollywood's film makers, let alone Michael Jackson's feet, and so as a game structure it appears a little, well, banal. Hardly the most appropriate label for a superstar.

That, however, was the brief and you can't blame the programmers for it. It is also possible that they were hamstrung by Michael Jackson's publishers. The press release reads 'Michael cannot die. Michael cannot be seen to die on screen. No violence! Michael Jackson is very anti-violence, so there are no weapons in the game until the 3rd level'.

'No weapons until the third level?'. What is supposed to happen then? Does MJ cease to be anti-violent for this level? Surely shone mistake. Shooting it out in a nightclub with a bunch of storm troopers seems just a teensy bit removed from non-violence. It does, however, make for one of the best bits of the game.

Amazingly, in the face of all this nonsense,

Emerald have produced a half decent game. It is not a game for hard core gamers, veterans of tough arcade adventures, and state of the art shoot 'em ups. It is however well suited to younger players – particularly if they are MJ fans.

The opening maze game is Pacman like – combining the appeal of collecting the various bits of the suit and seeing the jigsaw puzzle take shape with the minor tactical diversion of avoiding your fans, most of whom have varying movement patterns and strategies. It's a shame there are no power-ups in this level – as it would have greatly improved game play if you could have had a go at some of the nasties. But then it's not level three so you are not allowed to be violent yet. The best you can do when the going gets tough is run away, but you have a limited amount of energy for this so it's best saved for the really tight corners.

Once you get the suit, hop on the bike, and enter level two you are initially disappointed to find that it is pretty much identical to the previous level. However, there are more things to collect though – ten emeralds to be precise – before you can metamorphose into the Stratos Car. You are racing against a time limit so you have to make use of the radar panel to locate the emeralds and gather them in the quickest way. Unlike most computer game radar devices this one does actually need to be used and does also work. Bonus points are earned by destroying the bags of drugs by driving over them.

The nightclub scene is a welcome relief from the maze levels. At last you can grab a gun and start blasting the nasties that appear at the windows in this horizontally scrolling level. The graphics are far superior in this section. Jacko walks and runs with some of the elegance that you would expect from the best dancer in pop music.

An even better shoot 'em is to be had on the final screen when you attempt to destroy Mr Big's giant laser. All anti-violence preciousness goes out the window as the game turns into a good old fashioned shoot 'em up. Jacko is now a robot and has to shoot all of the guards before he gets to the giant laser.

Only four levels of play – but reasonably absorbing game play – result in a game that's a definite must for MJ fans (a valuable piece of memorabilia?). Game play is more suited to younger players – which is fine because most of MJ's fans are. The verdict for everyone else, however, is that the game is definitely not a 'thriller', but nor is it totally 'bad'. Not something, in short, that you'd make a long trek for.

● Eugene Lacey

ST VERSION

Disappointing sound track. The ST is capable of a lot better than this and when you consider the material Emerald had to work with there is no excuse for the awful 'plinky-plonky' rendition of the 'Bad' album title track. Graphics also leave a little to be desired on the first couple of levels. Technically not one of the best ST games around.

TOOBIN'

DOMARK shoot the rapids in a rubber ring

JET and Bif are two reeell cool dudes, who like nothing better than stripping down to some crazy shorts, hopping on their toobs and launching into the nearest river. One bright Californian day, they decide to do just that – but this time they picked the wrong river...

The wrong rivers, to be more precise. Sick of the ponds back home, they decide on a spot of globe-trotting in search of some real action. Their paddling japes take them along the Amazon, Yukon, Nile, Rio Grande and Colorado; and they're pretty crowded rivers these days. In fact, Jet and Bif have to be extra cool to get through the kind of hazards they face on this toob trip.

For example, each river has its own unique wildlife, such as hippos, crocs, submerged trees, snakes, fishermen's crazy floats, submarines and (in a nightmare section) a hand that hacks at you with a knife. There are plenty more obstacles, all of which will deflate your rubber toob; and if it all gets too much, you can get rid of them with an expertly lobbed Coke can. Then there are hazards on the bank. Trees topple and fall into the water, anglers launch lines at you, natives use you as target practice for their blowpipes, sewage spills seep sneakily towards you. In canyons, rocks fall in the water far too close to your Bermuda shorts for comfort.

It's not all bad, though. If you're a particularly deft toob-manipulator, bonuses lurk around every corner. Pass through gates without touching them for big points; collect cans to stock up on ammunition; chase after beach balls to speed you up, and collect patches for extra lives. In fact, if you manage to collect tons of points and avoid being killed, you'll qualify for extra-hard cool status.

At the end of each sub-stage you make a decision to paddle left or right through a canyon: choosing one route over the other determines which sub-stage you face next – and some are definitely more difficult than others! This is just one aspect of the game which makes it all the more enjoyable to come back to time and again.

Like the arcade parent, the home versions of Toobin' are great fun. The control method has been translated well from the two-button Wobbling on his inflatable, Jet can throw Coke cans to remove dangerous obstacles and reveal bonus objects. Running into a tree, twig or anything else that's sharp will puncture his rubber ring and drown him.

In two-player mode, Jet and Bif battle it out for points and pride. The river seems a whole lot smaller when there are two toobs wobbling around.

coin-op system, and it only takes a minute to get used to. If you get bored of the solo game (which will take a long time), there's always the two-player option. Not only does this halve your credits, it also means you can push your mate into the nearest twig and pinch all the Coke cans before he can grab them. Whether or not you've played the coin-op, take a look at Toobin', because it's one of the most enjoyable games around this Christmas.

● Gordon Houghton

You're not alone out there on the river. Shore geeks pelt things at you, crocodiles chase you from behind, hippos waddle up and gobble you up. Who's cool now?

AMIGA VERSION

Detailed, colourful graphics (almost full-screen scrolling), great music and heaps of playability make this a brilliant conversion of the coin-op – even if it's not completely accurate. Just the kind of game to cheer you up Fun from the start, the graded difficulty level, two-player option and large number of levels guarantee its latability.

DRAGON SPIRIT

Does Domark's Dragon do justice to the coin-op?

DRAGON Spirit is a relatively obscure and very tough coin-op which takes the vertically scrolling shoot 'em up theme into the realms of fantasy.

Eight completely different levels lie ahead of you, populated by unique opponents — all of whom will reduce your life-bar by one unit. Lose three units and you forfeit a life. At the end of each stage there's a fairly typical confrontation with a pretty awesome enemy which is very tough to kill.

Your basic weaponry consists of limitless bombs and the ability to spit fire-goblets, but this ammunition can be enhanced by bombing eggs on the ground. Blue eggs give you an extra head, and red ones give you an extra power unit; eventually, you can work your way up to a powerful flame-thrower.

Other enhancements come from killing flashing enemies. These include extra points, shields, mega-flame, multi-directional fire, homing flames and speed-ups.

In the end, Dragon Spirit is just a standard vertically scrolling shoot 'em up, but using a dragon as the main character rather than a fighter plane or spacecraft is a nice touch. All versions are characterised by poor sound effects, and that's the only real let-down. Domark's conversions contain all the features of the original coin-op and if you liked that, you should look at this.

● Gordon Houghton

SPECTRUM VERSION

Probably best played with keys, since with a joystick you can't fire and bomb at the same time (unlike the ST and Amiga versions). The sprites are nicely defined and animated, and the speed and toughness of the arcade game are well captured here.

ATARI ST VERSION

Smooth vertical scrolling and a pretty mean difficulty level make for addictive gameplay; however, the playing area is a bit small (compensated for by a sideways 'push' scroll), making it harder to anticipate attack waves. Still a good conversion, though.

ROLLER COASTER RUMBLER

TYNESOFT'S Corkscrew Simulator

WATERY eyes, heaving guts, white knuckles. Know the feeling? If you do you're probably one of the millions of people who go on roller coasters for the express purpose and pleasure of turning their internal organs upside down. Most of the theme parks have closed down for the winter, so if you're still bent on pursuing the thrills and spills of the corkscrew, you'll just have to rely on your computer simulation of all that rough and tumble fun...

As solo player or one half of a lean, mean team of two, you're equipped with nothing but a bog-standard roller coaster car and a couple of bazookas strapped on to the front and back. The basic idea is simple; just blast the hell out of any obstacles that appear on the vector graphics track.

Targets range from multi-coloured balloons dangling innocently from the roller coaster structure, to huge airborne ships dropping missiles all over the track. In between, there's a whole selection of hazardous geometric objects — exactly what they're supposed to be is anybody's guess — placed at intervals along the line. Occasionally rhomboids and cylinders completely block your path. If you don't manage to shoot them in time, they'll do a limited amount of damage to your car. Hit too many and your damage meter plummets down to zero sending the roller coaster completely off the track.

The track itself is viewed in first person perspective from either the front or the back of the car. You travel at standard speeds (slow uphill, very fast downhill) unless you alter them using the relevant keypresses to accelerate or brake.

The objective on each level is to hit a specified amount of targets in a specified period of time. If the timer runs out or you run out of bullets, the run is over and you've lost the game. Finish with time to spare and you move on to the next track.

If you get bored of just going round and round the roller coasters, there's actually an extra option on the Amiga and ST versions, which lets you leave the park and go off into the surrounding landscape to blast whatever takes your fancy. The PC version even lets you try out a monorail ride.

Frightened yet? No, nor were we.

PREDICTED INTEREST CURVE

A roller coaster simulator which just lacks that extra radical rumble.

The package comes with its own health warning: 'Roller Coaster Rumbler is only for the totally radical rumbler'. All I can say is that the totally radical rumbler must have a very powerful imagination. Jerky 3D vector graphics do not adequately capture the excitement of a roller coaster ride. It's difficult to blanch at hair-raising turns and death-defying dips when the track in front of you is an unrealistically weedy wireframe affair.

It's a pity because all the basic elements of a good game are here; different tracks, lots of obstacles and even a convincing sense of speed (only if you use the speed up option). The movement is very jerky, especially if you choose off-track mode, and sound effects are uninteresting (though you get a decent soundtrack tape thrown in) but ultimately it's on the vector graphics that the roller coaster crumbles. Queue-factor is what Roller Coaster Rumbler definitely lacks.

● Kati Hamza

AMIGA VERSION

Nest presentation and rumbling heavy-metal style soundtrack tape can't make up for the hair-raising excitement that this so patently lacks.

TWINWORLD

Can a jumpy-jumpy, collect the objects, thwart Ultimate Evil, teen-sy-weensy sprite-typ scenario still cut the mustard in 1989?

UBISOFT surprise us...

ANY set of instructions that starts off with the heading 'The Legend of the Sacred Amulet' must surely strike terror into the heart of the majority of computer gamers. I ask you. The 'Listen with Mother' school of game design.

Yep, we're scarcely in the Advanced Computer Entertainment market here, with a little man jumping around collecting 24 pieces of some stupid magic amulet that an evil something or other has scattered to the four winds. Fail and Evil (yawn) will win and all the good little pixies will have their private parts dismembered. Help!!

Nevertheless, apart from the astonishingly bad quality of sampled music at the start of the game, as far as jumpy-jumpy games go, I quite enjoyed Twinworld. And I'll tell you this much – it's big! Two ST discs worth of jumpy-jumpy? When the sprites are this small, that's a lot.

The scam is that your nicely animated sprite, Ulopa, has to battle his way through the lands infested with evil, killing monsters for points (and points make prizes if you summon the merchant) – trying to make difficult jumps across lava filled pools, armed only with three types of magic bubble.

You'll find you have a limited number of these, but extra can be obtained all round the shop by picking up the magic potions that are littered around the levels.

Each level has an upper bit on the land and an underworld bit – which often can only be accessed by having the correct key to get into a particular door. Look out for the odd bolt-holes, however, which you can use to get to the underworld without using keys.

This underworld part is important, as it runs parallel to the upper bit – so if you find a jump that is just that little bit too much to take, on the surface – chances are you're going to have to go back and take the tube under the obstacle to come out on the other side.

Such a banal scenario must live or die by the implementation – and I'm happy to say that, on the whole, programmers Blue Byte have made a great job, capturing an almost Super Mario feel in Twinworld.

The physics of your little hero appear to have been coded very well, so he has weight that is sensibly governed by gravity and momentum. This is in turn exploited by some of the puzzles – you make a jump, say, and if you don't reverse thrust straight away, it's the lava for you, m'lud!

Firing the bubbles isn't exactly straightforward either, with the exact parabolic trajectory depending on whether you're jumping up, down, standing or crouching – you'll find the bonus you get for zapping a monster – will vary depending on what type of bubble you use, too – the species being easily changed by a tap on the space bar.

Some of the jumps are difficult – some of the puzzles are a bit infuriating – and you can proceed in the sure knowledge that if you haven't picked all the useful items up before you get to meet the chief baddy, he'll probably pummel you to bits anyway.

But if you are the sort of person that craves the kind of agony/ecstasy gratification that this sort of game can deliver, however limited that sub-set of human beings might be, then this will undoubtedly be an essential purchase.

Those of us with more eclectic tastes and less money, however, would probably still rather go for Rick Dangerous or wait for Dynamic Debugger.

BUSHIDO

FIREBIRD's beat-em-up arcade adventure

BUSHIDO is a Japanese term meaning 'the way of the warrior' - a kind of military ethics for early feudal Japan. In the ancient oriental province of Shimosa, two clans, the Taira (nasty) and the Genji (nice - your lot, obviously) are battling it out to decide who's best.

With typical bravado you decide that a lone fighter is the best option. You can choose one of eight different characters: they don't look very different on screen, but, as you discover after a while, they do behave in genuinely different ways during the game. Some characters are better at fighting (the Mountain Warrior, for example), whereas others are more skilled in guile (such as the Buddhist Monk).

After training your infiltrator you unleash him on the Taira fortress. This is a flick-screen environment but Graftgold have added a bit of scrolling, which makes the rooms seem larger than normal and allows a bigger, more detailed main character - an unusual idea and one which works well. If this character gets killed, his magical belt will transport him back to base to recuperate - but he will have lost valuable time.

Most rooms contain special items to help you in your task: food, weapons, special potions and wands (experimentation needed), and keys which to the next stage. When you're not searching and solving, you're battling it out with the opposition.

Truly interactive 3D forced perspective games have never worked too well on the 64; oldies like Fairlight and Nosteratu were a bit too slow and only Head Over Heels managed to be addictive enough to compensate for the lack of speed. Bushido doesn't have the addition of Head Over Heels (there isn't really enough to the beat 'em up action or enough problem solving), but it is very fast and very playable. Anyone who likes a good arcade adventure should check it out.

RALLY CROSS CHALLENGE

ANCO versus Super Sprint

IF you've ever misspent happy hours groping furtively in your pocket for yet more ten pence to shove into the slots at the local arcade, you'll know all about Super Sprint and its clones. You'll also know that what singles this particular style of racing game out from the others is that it lets up to four players take part simultaneously. The official Super Sprint conversions have only managed the usual two. Now, if you've got the right joystick adaptor, you can ease your throttle and tear up the road in a rubber-burning gang of four. That's if you've got an ST or an Amiga - 8-bit owners are stuck with gruesome twosomes.

As per usual there are four drivers per race with non-human competitors to make up the number. Whoever comes last gets replaced by a computer but if you make it into the top three, you're rewarded with points (4 for a win, 2 for second place and 1 for third). You can use these later on, if you feel like customising your motor.

Each player is given access to a personal monitor screen before the action starts. It's at this point that you get to select your control method; not just from joystick or keyboard but from an additional selection of three different joystick controls. It all hangs on whether you prefer your acceleration automatic or manual (either by pushing the joystick up or pressing the fire button). It's a nice touch, though there's not all that much to choose between them.

You also get to make your choice from a menu of car improvements. These include turbo acceleration, more sensitive steering, improved road holding capabilities, a higher top speed and reduced braking distance as well as increased pit efficiency to reduce pit times. This is also where you'll be able to turn your points into extra equipment in between each race.

The single screen tracks throw up all sorts of obstacles in various combinations of tarmac and dirt: hairpin bends, bridges, railway tracks, roundabouts, fords and chicanes. Hit anything, and your mean machine immediately bursts into flames and is replaced by another one a few yards back. Drive too fast, and you'll skid or spin off the track, wasting valuable seconds. If it should get dark in the middle of a race, your headlights automatically come on.

None of this is breath-takingly new or innovative, but it's a tried and tested formula which has proved extremely addictive in the arcades. It also relies heavily on a user-friendly control method and that's exactly what Rally Cross Challenge hasn't got. It's far too easy to crash for a start. Touch a barrier, nick a chicane or graze the side of a bridge and your engine bursts into flames and puts you temporarily out of the race. After a few laps of exploding around the track this can start to get extremely frustrating, especially as the computer drivers never seem to make the same mistake.

It's all the more disappointing because the excellent graphics, slick presentation and wide variety of courses are a constant reminder of what Rally Cross might have been. If it weren't for the control method this would be a top-class racing game. As it stands, it's just too awkward to be anything more than mediocre.

Anco's Rally Cross looks and sounds a lot like Super Sprint; pity it doesn't play as well.

Despite the control difficulties, the colourful graphics, a wide variety of courses and lots of animated details make this look very attractive; sound is limited to a few droning effects. It's still the best driving game of this type out on the Amiga though, as Super Sprint (excellent on the ST) has never been converted for the machine.

As you can see, Interdictor's graphics could hardly be described as realistic — they are fast though.

FLIGHT simulators have always been amongst the most popular form of computer entertainment and the Archimedes has, at last come of age, with the arrival of Interdictor.

Put in control of a high-performance jet, your task is to fly along an enemy valley, destroying gun emplacements, capturing airfields and generally causing as much aggro as possible to the 'other side'.

You start at your own base, armed with a selection of weapons. Rapid cannon fire destroys gun bases, whilst more powerful rockets enable you to blow up anything from enemy barges to bridges. Heat seeking missiles make ideal deterrents when air-to-air combat is the only option left.

As well as weapons, your jet is equipped with all the usual instruments you'd expect on board. A radar and a map allow you to (hopefuly) spot enemy aircraft before they spot you, whilst various meters provide information regarding your height and speed. A head-up display (permanently overlaid over the front cockpit view) shows the rate of climb using a scale of pitch bars. These are numbered from 9 to 9 and move up or down depending on your current attitude (or angle).

INTERDICTOR

CLARES send the Archimedes skyward, but the interest level remains earthbound...

Control of the aircraft is provided through the mouse, or by using an optional joystick (available from Voltmace). Sensitivity of control can be anything from sluggish to feather-light. The middle setting gives the best compromise, although it's worth changing to the lightest when accurate control is needed, ie. flying under (and along) bridges. An 'Autostab' instrument acts rather like stabilizers on a bicycle, keeping you levelish when control gets out of hand. Very useful.

Now, enough of the theory. How does it fly? Engines on, brakes off and we're away. Pulling the mouse back slightly, raises the nose and the jet lifts off into the blue skies.

One of the main selling points of Interdictor is its 'attention to detail', although I would hardly say that the odd 'pyramid' and the occasional rectangle go to make up a 'realistic landscape'. About the best stationary graphics are the bridges. The actual plotting can be a bit haphazard; at one time, the view out of the right window showed two mountains, with the furthest plotted on top of the nearest!

The enemy (aircraft, trucks and barges) are by far the best graphics in the whole game, although it is rare that you'll get close enough to take a decent look. Perhaps if a little more thought had gone into the landscape, the 'realistic' label would be justified. Maybe it's meant to be Brazil you're flying over and all the trees have been cut down.

Flying the jet is easy enough and it doesn't take long to master rolls, loops and other acrobatic feats. I can't help feeling it's all a little too easy though. Taking off along the width of the runway and going straight into a vertical climb? I think not. There's no mention of the Harrier in the instructions but who am I to argue? Crashing is realistic though. Hit the ground and you're dead!

Fortunately graphics aren't the only part of a game. This is no Chaplin film and sound makes an appearance wherever possible. Whether it's the roar of the engine as you taxi along the runway, or the thudding explosions as your rockets bring the bridges down, all the sound-effects are excellent. Played through a decent amp, you could almost believe you were there — in the plane, not on the bridge!

To sum up, what could have been an excellent game, is marred by some careless mistakes, and also a general lack of interesting 'things' to do. The whole program goes fast, although this is mainly due to (a) it being run on an Arc, and (b) there isn't much going on anyway!

Unfortunately Interdictor isn't a touch on the latest 16-bit simulators (Bomber for instance), which is a shame. The Arc is capable of so much more and I hope CLARES realise this. Given it's raw power, the Arc could and should out-perform any 16-bit machine available.

(What there is of) Interdictor is playable and fun for a few hours. Once you've bombed the bridges and managed to land the jet a few times, there isn't much to hold your interest.

Let's hope the first flight simulator for the Arc isn't the last.

IT CAME FROM THE DESERT!

CINEMAWARE produce their best game yet: great graphics, great sound, giant ants...

EPIC ...that's one word you could use when describing the latest – and arguably greatest – game to come over the Atlantic from the Cinemaware Corp, It Came From the Desert. Three Amiga discs this time, gup.

Power up the first disc and BLAMM! – special effects, sampled music, sampled speech, the works. Not so much a loading screen, more an introductory disc. In 1985 you'd have put up Defender of the Crown to impress the neighbours, in 1989 you plug in Disc 1 of Desert. But what about the game itself?

Drawing again from movie cliché, this time Cinemaware have captured the 'Bug' movie feeling perfectly (for the original see movies like Attack of the Killer Tomatoes). In a delightful send up of a genre – never lapsing into the kind of mud-slinging that would break the spell – the program enters into a conspiracy with the player to believe that he (sexism is part of the cliché, unfortunately) is Geologist Greg Bradley working in the small 50's desert town of Lizard Breath.

You are a relative newcomer to the place, conducting research into the mineral content of meteor fragments, when a particularly unhealthy specimen plonks down just outside the town and – unbeknown to the innocent inhabitants – somehow produces a breed of giant ants that will overrun the town in 15 days. Unless you can intervene for the good guys!

In fact there are two parts to It Came From the Desert. First you have to collect enough evidence to convince the local Sheriff that the problem is real and convince him to call out the National Guard. After that...you direct the forces against the invasion and finally seek out the lair of the ants and destroy the Queen Ant and the nest. No problem, eh?

Cinemaware being the company that it is, the standard of both static and animated graphics is impeccably high. In the past, the main complaints have been against gameplay – here there is more than enough game and playability in it to satisfy most punters.

The main shell of the game has two elements – your view of static locations, in which you can interact with a particular person shown to be present, via a highlighted response menu plus a scrolling map of the town. Moving the screen pointer to each location will give you its name, plus the amount of time it will take you to get there.

Time is, in the present crisis, clearly of the essence and the game is played realtime, with a second of nowtime accounting for a minute in Lizard Breath.

The attendant arcade sequences are a mixed lot. The one-to-one ant fights (where you have to shoot off the giant antennae, incidentally) are simple, relevant and well implemented. The above view games where you are fighting the ants en-masse are fun and have a direct bearing on the outcome of the game. Whether the same can be said of the knife fight (some of the inhabitants are a trifle violent) and the 'Chicken' driving game is more open to debate.

However, fail in any of the games and you find yourself in hospital sentenced to any number of days on a diet of Jello. Attempted escape (so as not to loose time) leads into a hilarious top down game where you try to evade the hapless nursing staff and make it to the main entrance! Piercing sampled screams of, 'That's Him!' abound to make this game a comic extravaganza!

Taken as a whole, ICFD is probably the best yet from Cinemaware – with special merit going to an atmospheric soundtrack – and anyone who enjoyed previous efforts are certain to enjoy this one.

But the fact that it's a 1 Meg only game and in many ways the gameplay itself, show that the company has probably reached the near limit of what can be achieved using its present design philosophy and technology. Never satisfied with second best, it'll be interesting to see which way they go next.

GHOSTBUSTERS

Four years after the block-busting success of GB1 and David Crane's funky computer adaptation, ACTIVISION serves christmas spirit with its turkey...

SNORTING cocaine isn't the wisest of pursuits – as actor James Belushi was (so it is rumoured) unfortunate enough to find out. It not only cost him his life but a leading role in one of the biggest grossing comedies of all time.

A staggering box-office revenue of $220 million has inevitably spawned numerous cash-ins, including two lacklustre cartoon series: The Real Ghostbusters and Slimer! And The Real Ghostbusters plus associated paraphernalia such as action figures keep the tills ringing.

A film sequel was inevitable, but it almost didn't happen. Fortunately the original crew got back together and as a result Ghostbusters II was able to pick up the story. Four years after the team busted the demonic gatekeeper that was terrorising Sigourney Weaver's fridge, paranormal forces return to the city – and when Weaver, now a single mother, notices strange things happening to her baby...who's she gonna call?

The reunited Ghostbusters find themselves doing battle with a river of slime (which grows in response to people's negative emotions) flowing under New York and threatening to engulf the city. The slime's destination is traced to an Art Gallery in the centre of the city, and in it lies an ancient and mysterious painting of an evil wizardly warlord called Vigo.

Activision's computer incarnation of the original film has reputedly sold in excess of 2,000,000 units, which must please its designer, the near-legendary David Crane (who was also responsible for finding those Little Computer People). The task of converting the sequel however was carried out by Foursfield (Incredible Shrinking Sphere and the conversions of Time Scanner).

But whereas Mr Crane chose to exploit the general Ghostbusting theme of the film as opposed to more specific elements like the Marshmallow Man, Foursfield has chosen to exploit specific aspects of the film – three 'key' scenes, interspersed with choice snippets of digitised imagery from the film.

A sampled remix of the original Ghostbusters theme and a neat introductory sequence create a film-like atmosphere before the game proper begins. The first section sees a Ghostbuster-besotted Dan Aykroyd (the wasn't dressed like this in the film) being lowered down a shaft. Spooks attack from all sides (not in the film they didn't), and Dan shoots them with his weapon while swinging from side to side – his main aim is to collect three pieces of a scoop which is used to collect a sample of slime from the river below (well, Dan did have to collect some slime in the film, but he was already armed with the scoop).

Fast-forwarding through the best part of the movie, Section Two has you in control of the Statue Of Liberty and a crowd of native New Yorkers. The idea is to guide her along the horizontally scrolling street, shooting oncoming ghosts with her torch. The crowd is used to collect the ectoplasm released by dead ghosts while avoiding other ghouls on the floor. Quite where the torch and ghosts came from is anyone's guess...

The final section sees the 'busters inside the Art Gallery in a confrontation with the arch-villain Vigo. Having carefully lowered the four Ghostbusters down a rope into the gallery (but not too fast or they die), your first objective is to dispose of Janosz (Vigo's mortal minion) and rescue the baby to prevent Vigo's power being boosted. But then Vigo steps out of the painting and, via telekenesis, pulls the baby towards him. Quick! Avoid the energy bolts he unleashes and shoot him to win the game.

Control of each Ghostbuster is transferred via a separate screen, complete with digitised mugsshots. A twist in the gameplay sees two of them armed with proton guns, and two with slime guns. Janosz has to be shot with the slime, and Vigo (who steps out of painting once the baby is recovered) with the proton.

Apart from the stills and explanatory text, a digitised picture of Vigo is shown following the team's failure, and Janosz is heard to say: "You are like the buzzing of flies to heeem".

And that's your lot. Even more astounding but true, these three scenes take up three Amiga disks (a staggering FOUR on the ST), and it's a case of musical disks until you turn off. Sadly, Ghostbusters II looks like being one of the biggest turkeys you are likely to see this Christmas. It fails to succeed both as a film conversion and as a game in its own right. Interestingly enough the film was originally going to be called The Last Of The Ghostbusters. After this, I hope it is.

GALAXY FORCE

ACTIVISION convert Sega's eight-legged arcade monster.

GALAXY Force was a coin-op for the sea side piers and larger downtown arcades. An eight-legged monster with a hydraulic seat, massive screen, and speakers tucked into every nook and cranny, it was a monster – even by Sega's gargantuan standards.

As is often the case, the deluxe hydraulic version was something of a loss leader for the larger number of uprights that were to follow. Unfortunately for Sega, the game just didn't seem the same without your seat being thrown back as the ship zoomed forwards. After one short summer season Galaxy Force, the zenith of bells-and-whistles hydraulic arcade entertainment, had just about disappeared.

Meanwhile, Activision boss Rod Couzens announced that autumn to a press gathering at the London Intercontinental Hotel that his company had signed the rights and would be converting it for home use in Christmas '89. A few months dropped open in disbelief. Was this scepticism premature?

The results of this conversion are very far from what most people who have played the coin-op would regard as being a game of Galaxy Force. There has to be a point where the experience of playing the home version is so different to the experience of the coin-op that it is reasonable to put the question: are they the same thing at all, and – if not – is it therefore fair that they carry the same name?

The coin-op had amazingly fast, detailed, and colourful graphics with a space ship for you to control that could slow down, speed up and turn through almost 360 degrees. The ST version is slow, has blocky graphics utilising a very limited colour palette, and does not flip through 360 degrees, or anything remotely like it.

The five levels are selected by pulling the joystick to the right bringing into view a cameo view of the terrain on each level. They vary from aerial combat to caverns, trenches and deep space. Apart from blasting anything that is locked onto by your computerised cross-hair, your aim is also to penetrate the enemy fortress and destroy their HQ.

Each of the five levels plays very much like the last one. There are power-ups but these offer little discernible difference to your ship. Shield strength and energy bonuses are registered in your control panel as is a digital display of the time left to complete your mission.

About the best part of the game is when you are inside the fortress and have to swing right and left to avoid crashing into the walls but this too is let down by poor control of the ship and the inability in certain situations to 'right' your position should you collide with a wall.

What Galaxy Force boils down to is a very 3D deep space really shouldn't be as blocky as this.

rudimentary 3D shoot'em up with average graphics and sound. The coin-op relied heavily on the gaspability of the graphic wonders that could be created by its twin 32-bit processors and 16-bit sound processor. The game design was never much to write home about – and without the all singing, all dancing, rockin' rollin' hydraulic cabinet it just ain't the same.

Not exactly in the great tradition of arcade conversions, Galaxy Force fails to impress from the start and never recovers.

ANYBODY remember Paul Shirley? Well, if your games-playing history doesn't go back beyond a couple of years, it's a good bet you don't. But if you're a seasoned gamer, you're most likely to reply, "The Paul Shirley?" as young Paul was the man behind Spindizzy, an upmarket clone of Atari's Marble Madness, and one of the true all-time computer classics which, sadly, never made its way onto the 16-bits.

Now, after a two-year absence, Paul has returned with Quartz, another brilliant clone – but this time he's not drawn inspiration from any one game, but from every shoot 'em up ever written! Quartz traps you inside a huge crystal, with the simple objective of escaping – alive.

Anybody who knows anything about physics will tell you that a crystal is composed of many different layers, and it's these layers that form the basic layout of the game. The lynchpin of the entire game is the Lattice, an eight-way scrolling shoot 'em up set in the core of the crystal and based on the classic Asteroids. Here, though, the asteroids are replaced by coloured Hadrons that float around the Lattice. Shooting the Hadrons break them up into smaller Quarks which in turn become collectable Neutrinos when shot. Collect the correct amount of each colour Neutrino, and they can be traded in for a power-up, and this is where the real fun starts.

Your ship is equipped with three empty weapon slots (upgradable to six), where weapons are placed when purchased. This system allows any combination of the ten weapons to be fitted, so – depending on your playing style – you could have three Octoguns, an Octogun, plus a Bomb and a Flame, or...anything you like. The function keys switch the weapons on and off, allowing you to switch over to the correct weapon for the next section.

The man behind Spindizzy returns with a stunning shoot-em-up for FIREBIRD.

After a minute or so of blasting and collecting, you are dragged off course into one of the four other layers of the crystal. The Atomic Zone is the classic left-to-right scrolling shoot 'em up with a number of novel twists (rotating arms of flame, for example, similar to those in Super Mario Brothers) and The Nucleus, an end-of-level challenge that must be destroyed one cell at a time.

The Void scrolls from top-to-bottom. Nothing special there, but the swarms of aliens are accompanied by meteors that come OUT of the screen at out, Galaxy Force-style, gun installations, and an even tougher guardian. The Lair scrolls from right-to-left and plays like a mirror image of the Atomic Zone, but is much tougher due to the deadly force fields and electric storms. Finally there's the Organic Zone, a classic bottom-to-top vertical scroller in the Xenon mold where everything has an Alien-esque slimy feel – look out for the pulsating brain at the end!

When one of the sections is completed, it's back to another, tougher Lattice, swarming with aliens as well as Hadrons. And so it goes on...

Quartz is sheer brilliance – virtually flawless in every aspect. Each of the five separate levels is a respectable game in its own right, but bundled together they make an awesome combination. It's tough...but not so tough as to be frustrating or off-putting. Aesthetically, it's a dream; with Bob Stevenson's top-hole graphics lend a touch of class together with some of the best soundtracks heard on the ST and Amiga to date. Quartz is an amazing game seriously rivals Xenon II in the shoot 'em up stakes.

games...

OF late, the French have started issuing a more than serious threat to the British software market. With the excellent Future Wars hitting the shelves over Christmas and now Drakken, it looks like 1990's going to be a heady year for the Gallic software tycoons.

Drakken is a stylish role play, set in your typical run-of-the-mill fantasy world, bringing together four adventurers to triumph over yet another horde of evil demons. As with most RPG's you have to create your little band from scratch, but you cannot re-roll the dice to change a character's statistics, so it's quite easy to have a varied party. With a choice of fighter, scout, magician or priest you can play the field and have an immense number of abilities at your disposal.

All commands are issued via the mouse and the return key, then through a pleasantly tidy operating system. When the group travels across the land, they move as a unit. Pressing return divides the party into the four members. From there you can send each one on a separate task.

The only problem with moving the group (or a character) to a different location is the time factor; first you select where you want them to go, then sit back and wait for them to get there, taking all of half a minute at times.

Manipulating on screen objects is achieved by placing the cursor over them then clicking the left button, similar to the system in the Sierra games. There is also a list of commands which are accessible when an individual character is selected, including a useful search facility.

Interactions between computer controlled characters and your team is basic but effective. You're given the choice of greeting, questioning or impressing them. Most of the time any of these will obtain a useful reaction, though on the odd occasion they will attack.

Combat is also executed in a simple, effective manner. merely click the pointer on the creature you wish to maim and the character nearest will strike a blow. Naturally you can expect some fierce retaliation. Spells can be used by the magician and priest and are operated in much the same way as the combat, select a spell and click where you want to activate it.

As RPG's go Drakken is a fine game, though perhaps lacking the depth that makes a classic game. But on the whole a fun, lasting fantasy jaunt.

Austerlitz

COMING SOON ON ATARI ST, AMIGA & PC

Get ready to experience the Horror and Glory that was the battle of Austerlitz!

The date is the 2nd December 1805. The place is a few miles east of Bruno in the province of Moldavia. Ranged across the barren Pratzen heights are the forces of the Austro-Russian army. Facing them, between Santon Hill and the River Bosenitz is Napoleon's Grand Armée. The greatest battle ever to be fought by France's 'Little Corporal' is about to begin.

Using a unique system developed by Dr. Peter Turcan, AUSTERLITZ gives you the opportunity to relive that battle. The battlefield is represented on your screen in incredible 3D graphics. You can actually observe your troops as they move and fight their way across the terrain.

Your orders are written out for your Corps Commanders, just as they would have been at the actual battle, and then relayed by messenger riders. Of course, orders might be reinterpreted, ignored, or even fail to get to their anticipated destination, and even if they do arrive, it all takes time - exactly the sort of problems faced by Napoleon and the Russian Czar Alexander on that cold winter day.

Play AUSTERLITZ, and take up the challenge that gives you the chance to rewrite the history books!

THE CYCLES

ACCOLADE put the PC on two wheels and give you 15 tracks to choose from.

EXACTLY what kind of bizarre chimera you'd get if you fused a stereotyped biker with the average PC user must stretch even the most vivid of imaginations. I can envisage the scene now.

Dressed in full M&S rig - with tassels - he approaches the machine. Nonchalantly mounting the swivel chair, he whips off the studded leather dust cover (IBM Rools) and powers up the International Bonneville Machines 45 Mhz 386 with an 80 Meg hard disc.

The internal drive growls into life as the whole kit surges power into the customised monitor. As the C prompt bursts onto the screen he sends the mouse screaming across the desk into a full blown wheeler and taking the first double click blindingly fast, brings up.....well...The Cycles probably.

Published by US firm Accolade, programmed by the Canadian mob at DSI, The Cycles is very much a transatlantic product aimed at the recreational PC user and attempts to capture the thrills, spills, hills, and chills of international Grand Prix motor cycle racing. And it's nothing if not comprehensive.

As you come to expect from US software, there are options galore before you even set foot on the tarmac. Take a practice lap, a single race, or go for the big one - a full season of 15 races, each round a different track. Choose a difficulty level - there are five in all from easy-peasy auto gear change, undamagable bike and boy scout opposition to full manual, full realism on a track full of Helis Angels.

Choose name, number of laps per race, then go on to choose your weapon - 125cc, 250cc or the big mutha - 500cc racing beast. Four cylinders, six gears, 165mph at full wack. Ouch! So on to the race itself.

Selecting one track from 15 international venues (the Brit track is Donington Park, not Silverstone - boo!) you find your view is a classic 'over the handlebars' job, rather than the behind the bike view of, say, Hang On or Honda RVF. First thing - you take one lap to qualify for a place on the grid. Voome!

Using joystick or keyboard, the controls are simple enough - faster/slower, left/right, change up or change down - and quite responsive. Particularly good news for non-standard joystick owners is that you calibrate your stick before the race.

Zooming off the grid at high speed (on the higher difficulty this levels results in spectacular wheelies) you have the track to yourself and there's no denying that it's fun. Going into a turn does not tilt the horizon - that stays level the whole time - but the handlebars turn in, and the right clutch hand animates when you change gear.

Another neat touch is the way that track gradients have been handled, with quite realistic dips and hills to encounter - certainly the best I've ever seen on a PC to date.

Finish the lap, get a grid position and the real thing starts - against nine other guys. Some drive pretty damn fast and all seem to get in the way just when you'd rather they didn't. All ex-bike messengers probably.

The whole event is undoubtedly a good laugh and if you want to take on a whole season the program even allows you to save position and come back to complete the marathon another time. But does The Cycles ever manage to make you suspend your belief that you are ever doing anything other than playing a computer game? Unfortunately not.

Partly it's the hardware limitations of the PC. Most of us will have to put up with Spectrum-standard sound - although those with Tandy sound or Ad Lib boards will do much better. The graphics can't be to blame - EGA is fine and CGA is, well, adequate yucky CGA.

Probably I'd pinpoint lack of speed as the major factor. It's not that Cycles is slow, far from it, but it doesn't seem to deliver quite fast enough to convey that extra bit of realism the hardened computer biker will hunger for. Makes you wonder how much of an overhead that very nicely implemented, but largely unused, rear view window takes up?

Heading up to the finish (with most of the other competitors ahead of you unfortunately) in glorious 3D on the PC.

However, The Cycles still comes well into the category of 'quality product' and as long as your expectations are not unrealistic will not disappoint if you're looking for a fun race game with enough options to make sure you'll be playing it for more than the customary couple of weeks. Yet another reason to consider buying a sound board, too!

SNARE

THALAMUS ensnare late night game addicts with their newest puzzler

QUEDEX remember that? Well, unless you're a C64 owner who enjoys puzzle type games you probably won't. The idea behind the game (which incidentally gained an ACE Rating of 934 in our very first issue) was that you controlled a ball rolling across a series of planes. The aim was to exit each plane in the quickest possible time, but in order to do this you had to solve some very tricky problems first. The resulting game was addictive enough to keep even the most somnolent person playing all night.

Thalamus' latest puzzler, Snare, is very much in the same vein. This time, rather than a ball, you control a small spacecraft which glides over a platform. Using the joystick you can control the craft's speed and direction, as well as making it fire and jump. Turning is a little confusing at first because the whole screen suddenly flips through 90°. Until you become accustomed to this it can be very disorientating, especially if you make several turns in quick succession. Eventually you think nothing of it, but it is still quite confusing watching somebody else play.

Mastering jumping is absolutely essential, because there are many occasions on which you have to leap chasms between platforms. It's not just a case of moving to the edge of the platform and leaping either. You have to carefully gauge your speed on the approach. Get it too slow and you won't make the distance and consequently end up plummeting to a very sticky end. Approach too quickly and you'll probably overshoot and smash into a wall on the opposite platform.

Again the idea behind this game is to find the transporter that allows you to exit each level. Occasionally a level will be divided into several sections, each of which is linked by a further transporter pad.

Solving each level is not quite as simple as gliding about until you find the exit however. Firstly, each level is divided up into corridors by walls. Hit one of these and you're a gorma. Secondly there are a number of special tiles strategically placed on each level. Each of these has a different effect on your craft if you pass over them. The effects vary from minor inconveniences (like preventing you from turning) to disasters (sending you hurtling forward at full speed towards a nearby wall for instance).

Each of the different types of tile is colour coded, but it is all too easy to forget which does what. This is the one small gripe I have — it would have been better if each tile had a completely different design rather than just being a different colour. The problem is not enough to spoil the game however.

Another problem you have to face are the alien ships which patrol each level. These keep to set routes rather than attacking you directly. Contact, however, is still deadly. It will do you no good whatsoever to simply blast every alien ship you come across (some of them are indestructible anyway). Many of them are essential to the completion of the level. In some cases you must redirect the alien by building new walls to force the enemy ship to lay new tiles for you.

There are also switches which affect some part of the platform you are currently on. Unfortunately they can also be activated by the aliens. It is most distressing when you are about to cross a bridge which has been erected by throwing a switch, to find it suddenly disappear because some inconsiderate alien ship has run over the same switch.

The first few levels of Snare are not that taxing, but you will soon find that quite a bit of lateral thinking is required if you are to progress. The arcade style aspect should not be quickly forgotten either. At times you need a pretty dextrous joystick technique to overcome some of the devious obstacles the programmer has put in your way.

if you don't like games that require too much thinking then I can't really recommend this to you. On the other hand, if, like me, you enjoy putting the old grey matter into play from time to time then this is just your cup of tea. Go ahead and try it — you'll find it frustrating, but I guarantee you'll be back time and time again until you complete it.

The graphics are really not all that hot. In fact I'd go as far as to say that they are functional. There could have been improvements here, but fortunately the game is not spoiled too much by this inadequacy. The sound is generally good, and not too obtrusive important when you're trying to think on your feet. On the whole Snare on the 64 is an enjoyable and very addictive game.

CLOWN-O-MANIA

STARBYTE clown about with manic 3D platform fun

MATTHEW Smith's well-known and ancient debut, Manic Miner, was one of those rare games in which simplicity was the key to success. It featured small, but cute sprites, an uninvolved scenario, and straightforward two-dimensional play-screens. It doesn't exactly sound like a recipe for an inspiring game does it?

The game was a runaway success. Highly playable and extremely addictive, it set a precedent for games to come and – together with other classic titles like Boulderdash and PacMan – helped establish the golden rule that large colourful graphics, megabytes of digitised sound, and highly complicated gameplay are not prerequisites of a great game.

Top marks, therefore, to Starbyte for rejecting current trends towards highly complex scenarios and producing a game which has many of the qualities of Manic Miner, and combines them with another great classic in the same vein – Pacman – bringing both concepts up to date.

In Clown-o-Mania you play Beppo, a circus clown. One day he discovers a map showing the way to a 'land of many crystals', and decides to give up clowning for ever to go in search of them. Simple, eh?

The actual land Beppo finds is made up of a series of three-dimensional platforms on which are arrayed small round crystals (worth a measly 1 point each) and more exotic angular crystals (worth a handsome 10 points each). These Beppo must collect in PacMan style as quickly as possible. There are also roving nasties of varying shape, colour, and deadliness to contend with.

Movement is achieved using the joystick (which actually takes a little getting used to because of the angle of the platform). To get between levels Beppo must use little yellow ladders. Occasionally there are funnels which he can fall into to descend to a much lower platform or Trampolines and Volcanoes which can be used to reach higher ones. The only other means of transport over large distances are beamers. These are little square teleport pads which can more often than not prove to be extremely frustrating.

Just in case you think that all you are getting here is a souped up 3D Pacman variant, I ought to say at this juncture that there is plenty of thinking involved as well, especially on later levels. For example, you will discover squares which change colour as you walk over them. If you manage to complete the level leaving all of the squares the same colour you will earn a massive 10,000 point bonus. That's not as easy as it sounds. As the levels become harder you will frequently find that you 'paint yourself into a corner' as it were, and have to undo all your careful work to get yourself out again.

Clown-o-mania: reestablishing the art of the simple game?

As if colouring squares wasn't enough, you will also have to master the use of pyramids. These come in two forms. Blue pyramids, when dropped, become obstacles which prevent the movement of any nasties that try to cross them, so you can use them to fence monsters in. White pyramids, on the other hand, will destroy any creatures that come into contact with them.

There are many goodies to be had to help you on your way: Clown masks will give you extra lives; Razor Blades can be collected and fired at the nasties; and Jumps can be collected which allow you to leap over gaps. The latter two shoot round the screen at a rapid rate, so collecting them is not that easy.

Once you get further into Clown-o-Mania you will also begin to encounter other interesting features like one-way tiles, speed-up tiles and other similar items, all of which must be taken into account as you plan your completion of each level. You will find that you whizz through the first few levels quite quickly, but don't worry – there are seventy of them and they get tricky very quickly.

If you enjoy puzzles combined with fast action then Clown-o-Mania is most certainly recommended. It's very easy to get into, but should still provide a long-lasting challenge. Smooth multi-directional scrolling, colourful, well-animated sprites, and pleasant background ditties all go to make up a very polished and entertaining game.

Midwinter

It's nearly five years since Mike Singleton launched Lords of Midnight upon an unsuspecting games world. The program offered a whole new dimension of game-playing experience by combining strategy with the revolutionary 'landscaping' technique. 250,000 troops, lots of player characters to recruit, and thousands of graphic locations made it a true record-breaker.

Unfortunately none of Mike's later games really lived up to the promise of LOM. Although Doomdark's Revenge and other titles were impressive, they lacked the magic combination of simplicity, immediate appeal, and strategic interest that made LOM a winner. The long wait for a true successor to Lords of Midnight may now be over.

The scenario for Midwinter is simple but compelling. Just as the world gets used to global warming and is casting around for a solution to the problems of the rising sea-levels, along comes a massive meteorite that blasts into the jungles of Burma with the force of a 10000 megaton bomb. Dust and debris are hurled into the atmosphere, cutting off the sun's rays and leading to a rapid cooling of the earth's temperature. And if that wasn't bad enough, a second natural catastrophe (volcanic explosions caused by an earthquake in Central America) compounds the situation. Earth temperatures plummet to -25 degrees and Midwinter has set in.

One of the first attractions of the game is the detailed research that has been put into the scenario. It may sound horrific, but every element has been closely vetted by experts at the Climate Research Unit of the University of East Anglia, one of the world's main sources of expertise in this subject. Whichever bit of the scenario you try to knock, the result is a solid chunk of authority and not the hollow ring of fiction. Which makes playing the game far more compelling...

Set on the island of Midwinter, the plot is simple but effective. Midwinter is a 400-mile long landmass formed by falling sea-levels. Authenticity is the keynote again: the topography of the island was fixed after the game design team checked out Admiralty charts for the Azores area.

In the new Ice Age, Midwinter offers salvation to a small group of pioneers who, by establishing heat mines (authenticity again: the designs were taken from similar establishments in Iceland), have created a more hospitable environment. After a generation of successful colonisation, the islanders awake one morning to discover they have lost contact with their colleagues living in the southern-most parts of Midwinter. Someone, it seems, is intent on seizing their island sanctuary and, in doing so, condemning them to death from cold and starvation.

COLD WAR

The scenario of the game from this point on combines strategy and action in a manner very similar to Lords of Midnight. Just as in that game you were attempting to halt the advance of Doomdark's forces either by destroying them or by penetrating Doomdark's stronghold, so in Midwinter you must prevent the heat-mines from falling into enemy hands, recruit allies from amongst the other islanders, and force either a military or strategic victory. Whatever happens, you have to destroy the enemy camp at the south of the island. If all the heat-mines are captured, you lose...

The similarities to Lords of Midnight, however, are soon forgotten when you start playing. Unlike LOM you have a full-scale 3D fractal generated landscape to travel over. Furthermore there are three different ways of travelling (skiing, ice-buggy, or hang-gliding) and each has certain tactical implications in terms of speed, vulnerability, and the ability to access certain parts of the island.

Strategy is more dominant in Midwinter too, since the program offers very comprehensive mapping functions that enable you to track enemy movements and generate battle plans on a large scale. Information on the current status of the struggle is therefore easily available at any time.

You have to recruit up to 32 allies in the struggle against the invaders. Here again there have been considerable advances over the early Singleton titles. Each character has a complex profile and history that makes relationships vital in establishing alliances. This all adds to the strategic elements, together with your characters' differing skills in a wide range of areas.

The graphic display of the game is superb. Midwinter makes clever use of a limited palette to display a detailed fractal landscape that scrolls very rapidly in all directions. Land contours are all faithfully imple-

ON YER SNOW BIKE!

There are four principal means of transport in Midwinter, each with a corresponding view of the surrounding landscape.

▲ Your ski-goggles...

▲ This is the view from your buggy cabin: buggies are fast and secure, but there are some places they can't reach. Much used by the opposition.

Hang-gliding is THE way to travel, always provided you can find a thermal updraft. Here you're out over the cliffs. Note the 'misty' horizon...

mented, so that if you follow an enemy snow buggy you can see its tail rise and fall as it negotiates the icy slopes. Ski too fast down one hill, and you could come to grief if there's a steep slope up the other side of the valley. Topography plays an essential role in the strategy of the game, its implications ranging from simple ambush techniques to the feasibility of hang-gliding from one cliff-top to another. Even the thermals are linked, as in real life, to the terrain below.

Gameplay is quick and easy, driven by a selection of attractive icons that enable you to move between various command modes. Once in control of a character your principle actions are driven either from the movement or decision screens. You can swap characters at any time, wherever they may be, provided you have previously recruited them – you start with just one and must make friends quickly to survive. The game has that classic combination of simplicity and depth that could well make it a winner.

GAME OF THE YEAR?

Microprose have gone through several major changes recently. After first acquiring the three Telecomsoft labels, and marketing the Incentive games, they even stretched to forming two new labels of their own, Microstyle and Microstatus. After learning a few tough lessons, the company have now settled down and are planning a new Advanced Computer Entertainment strategy...Fewer games, more time and money spent on development, and hopefully what we'll miss in terms of quantity will be made up by quality.

Since releases like M1 Tank Platoon and Gunship were scarcely negligible achievements, it's difficult to see exactly how much more resources Microprose

MAPPA MUNDI

The map screens in Midwinter are especially impressive. The display is built around a 20 million triangle, fractal generated landscape. A button panel enables you select different displays, pinpointing characters, heat mines, and other game elements.

▲ Here you are at full zoom-out, with the 'character current location' option selected.

MIDWINTER TECHNO-PORN

Map: dual display ('satellite view' (light-source shading) and topographical) 10000 control points fractal generated, equivalent to 40Mbytes of data.

20 million triangles of graphic display
3000 unique place names

Characters: 32 player characters
14 attributes and skills
2000 invading troops

Display: Up to two mile view
Up to 400 triangles per frame
Buildings have up to 30 faces

▲ You can select light-source shading too, useful for planning tactical manoeuvres.

▲ Complex character attribute screens are backed up by comprehensive details in the manual. You have to take careful note of who's who and what their particular likes and dislikes are as these factors affect recruitment and tactics.

▲ This is the view through your sniper scope. You've got an enemy buggy in your sights. They bob up and down convincingly as they negotiate the terrain.

▲ Down in the 'real world', some of the features are fairly complex. Here you are outside a village; that's a heat mine on the left.

can put into a game (Tank, for example, had a manual that weighed in like a coffee table book) and still make a profit. 'We're relying entirely on the quality of the product,' answered marketing director Peter Jones. 'This game is far and away the biggest project we have ever undertaken. It's arguably the largest project ever undertaken for a home computer. We genuinely believe it's the beginning of a whole new generation of computer software.'

Hmmm. We've heard some of this before, we think! But however sceptical you may be about the claims, you can't argue with the facts. We've already sat down and delved into the world of Midwinter and we reckon it just might be THE big game of 1990. Naturally we're reserving final judgement until we've carried out more in-depth play-testing: watch out for the definitive ACE verdict next month...

THE MISSION IS VITAL – THE ODDS ARE AGAINST YOU.

F15 Strike Eagle II

F15 Strike Eagle II is a whole new concept in computer air warfare. Dogfighting is the name of the game. The air swarms with enemy aircraft. Dice with death as you fight your 'burners' and head for the skies. Success depends on making the right moves – fast. Super smooth, non-stop action takes place over 250,000 square miles of authentic terrain. Superb, solid-filled polygon based 3D graphics makes it feel as though you really are in the thick of the action. Hundreds of options, four difficulty levels and a vast amount of missions and scenarios make F15 Strike Eagle II perfect for dogfighting veterans and novices alike.

F-19 Stealth Fighter

MicroProse's F-19 Stealth Fighter transports you into the real world of Stealth Technology. Placed in charge of one of the USAF's most valuable and secret aircraft, you must carry out missions deemed too dangerous for normal aircraft to accomplish. Amazing three-dimensional graphics add a totally new dimension to F-19 Stealth Fighter as you fly, undetected, at 75 feet around Berlin and strike deep within Communist territory. F-19 is not just a flight simulation – it's an experience!

Gunship

Gunship has proved itself to be one of the truly great combat flight simulations. Based on the AH-64 Apache, one of the most advanced attack helicopters in the world and developed with the help of real attack helicopter pilots, Gunship lets you loose on a high-performance helicopter that can fly low and slow, hover, sidestep, fly backwards, rotate and go into a full-blooded, 200 knot power dive through some of the hottest combat zones in the world. In the face of adversity, it is a brave heart and sharp mind that matters more than the technology behind the man. The spirit of attack is all.

KEEP THE THIEF

Every adventurer worth his or her salt makes good use of the TAKE or GET command – but Keep the Thief puts a rather different slant on this innocuous pastime. Rather than allow you to wander round the world blithely looting shops and houses with the owners simply turning a blind eye, the game takes a rather more realistic view of theft. Get caught TAKING anything in the city of Tel Mercon and it's curtains...

You take the title role, in permanent exile from your home town for persistent anti-social behaviour. Your new hunting ground is the Tri-City area and the city of Tel Mercon in particular, where once the evil God-King Telloc held sway. Here, rich pickings are on offer for the successful thief, but Keef has much to learn in order to survive, let alone become the new God-King which is your ultimate objective. Since rumour has it that the all-powerful Telloc – banished by peasant revolt – is still alive somewhere in the land, it's questionable whether this objective is entirely level-headed.

Starting in the jungle near the city, your first necessity is to equip yourself with weapons and armour to give you a fighting chance of survival. Unfortunately such items are expensive so you'll either have to steal them from under the nose of the smith or look around for valuables which are less well guarded elsewhere.

The streets of Tel Mercon contain some pretty wealthy households who often leave valuables lying in full view and apparently unguarded. However some citizens are rather less trusting than their fellows and use a variety of subtle traps to protect their goods from the likes of you. Armed guards on patrol are a further hazard, so you might try your luck in the jungle instead, where the pickings are not so rich but the monsters and outlaws there generally carry some personal wealth, and even, occasionally, useful items of weaponry and armour.

The screen display is divided into several sections. The top half shows either a still graphic of your location, a 3D representation of the combat area, your spell mixing cloth and ingredients, and a direction indicator.

During combat an overhead view of the combat area is shown as a small scale map supported by a radar like display of your direction of view. Below this is a long narrow panel in which any trees or monsters are shown in 3D perspective.

Below the main display is the heart of the control system. A set of boxes show currently available command words. Clicking on these either implements the command or calls up a further sub-menu. The system is very easy to use and quick to learn.

In addition to icons, many housekeeping functions are available on the menu bar including options to reduce the numbers and nasti-mixing ingredients on your spell cloth and include such gems as Bandus Aidus for healing and Flickus Bickus for light. To mix spells you need to own the appropriate spellbook of which there are several to find, then decipher the cryptic clues given to decide which reagents are needed. While many common reagents are available at the herb shop, more exotic numbers can involve a long and dangerous trek to acquire.

Combat takes place in real time and requires both tactics and fast reactions at times. Both ranged and close quarter weapons can be used as may some spells if already prepared. But be warned, once in combat the battle is to the death, usually yours, so save often as ambushes are frequent.

Keep the Thief is a well crafted RPG which should offer hours of exploration and discovery. The whole game is shot through with humour, often in the form of insults and put-downs, which help to set and maintain a very enjoyable atmosphere. Its style is a nicely welded combination of traditional adventure and character building with plenty of flexibility to explore and try out ideas.

LANDSCAPE Clear, colourful graphics, somewhat spoilt by inconsistent movement techniques. Dungeons are rather sparsely drawn and not up to the standard of other locations

ENCOUNTERS 75
Lots of non-hostile characters against whom you can pit your wits and skill, although conversation is limited to set responses.

CHALLENGE While not too difficult to play, the sheer range of options to be considered simply to survive will provide hours of enjoyable play.

SYSTEM 80
Very easy to control, but changes of movement style

Keef The Thief offers a fresh and original approach to the genre. Likely to appeal to both RPG and text/graphic addicts it provides a lasting challenge for experienced and novice players alike – and it's hilarious!

MYSTERY OF THE MUMMY

The year is 1912, the place Hamburg in this new adventure from Rainbow Arts. Programmed by Time Warp, the game casts you as a lawyer who, together with his driver/companion Wilhelm, is approached by local resident Rudolf Rabensberg.

It seems a mummy belonging to Mr Rabensberg's father was stolen from an exhibition several years ago and never recovered. Now news has reached his son that an important African mummy is to be put up for auction. Your task is to discover whether the two mummies are in fact one and the same. As a typical jetsetter of the era, you are due in Munich on Thursday and today is Sunday – your time is therefore limited.

The screen display is divided into sections which show a clock with the current time, a short text description of your location and conversations with other people, a set of icons for controlling the game, a picture of your location and four bars showing your level of money, hunger, thirst and tiredness. Input is a mixture of mouse/icon and typing (addresses, names etc).

A quick glimpse at a new detective-style graphic adventure from RAINBOW ARTS. In the style of some of the recent French mysteries (Mortville Manor, for example) you explore Hamburg in a search for a missing mummy...

Gameplay consists initially of exploring the town by visiting various addresses and asking people you meet about other people. With well over a hundred characters the permutations are mind-boggling. The game also includes several action sequences which range from salvaging exhibits from the bottom of a lake to messing about in a forensic laboratory with chemicals bought from the local chemist.

To aid you in your task you are provided with a map of Hamburg showing 186 numbered places and a telephone/address book listing the residents, theatres, hospitals etc. From your hotel room you are able to contact many people by telephone, while others may be visited either on foot or by car.

Since I haven't got very far into the game yet I'm reluctant to give this one the benefit of a full rating. Stand by for more details next month.

DRAGONS OF FLAME

US GOLD continue the Heroes of the Lance saga but tone down the hack'n'slay elements.

Remember Heroes of the Lance? Did you manage to recover the Disks of Mishakal from Khisanth the guardian? If so, you'll enjoy this follow-up in the Draconance series.

Draconian forces have spread out across the face of Krynn with only the Qualinesti elves still holding out. Although the elves will fail the Companions still have a chance to free the slaves of Pax Tharkas and recover the long-lost Wyrmslayer. The Companions must run the gauntlet of swarming Draconian forces to succeed.

Play takes place in the open initially with the party seen from overhead as they move about the countryside. However the Draconian forces are everywhere and battle is joined from the first moments of the game.

As combat becomes imminent the overhead view changes to the more familiar side-on shot as used in Heroes. Fighting is a matter of aiming low, middle or high at the enemy or casting ranged weapons such as spears from a safe distance. If you're anything like me you'll find yourself frantically waggling the joystick anywhere just to stay alive! Following combat the press of a key returns the screen to an overhead view.

All your characters are shown in cameo at the bottom of the screen together with a compass pointer on the left. Accessing commands is achieved by pressing the space bar to bring up the main menu. From here various actions can be selected such as spell casting, changing the marching order, manipulating objects, saving/loading etc. Also available is a command to show a map of the whole area of the quest in case you get lost.

Pax Tharkas is made up of several levels containing a variety of secret doors and traps and is very similar to Heroes visually with your character shown side-on against the background scenery of walls, doors, passages etc.

The display's an improvement however. Bright primary colours make identifying objects and characters much easier and quicker which in turn makes the game more friendly than its predecessor.

While Heroes of the Lance had too much of the hack & slay and too few strategic elements for my liking, Dragons of Flame seems to have a far better balance, therefore appealing to a wider range of adventure tastes. Although basically an arcade adventure, the game contains enough puzzle elements to satisfy most followers of the fantasy genre.

Colours in Dragons are much less muddy than they were in Heroes and easier on the eye to boot.

TRICKS 'N' TACTICS

FEELING LOST? TNT GETS THOSE TRICKY GAMES MAPPED OUT

TV Sports Football

If you enjoyed this game as much as I did then by now you are probably at the stage where you want to improve your playing skills. These 16 gems from M.Dhooper of Belvedere, Kent might prove helpful in doing so.

1. Fake Punts are the best to use.
2. Don't run with your quarterback.
3. Always pass the ball at the earliest opportunity.
4. Passing to the left is generally better than to the right.
5. Make sure the ball is thrown in front of the half-back.
6. Don't make long passes as there is probably a member of the opposition further up the pitch.
7. Run along the edges.
8. Try not to pass into the end zone. Try to run the ball in.
9. Run straight ahead and go diagonally when there is someone running in front or behind you.
10. If you don't do well on your first three downs go for a field goal instead of making a risky throw/run.
11. Field goals have more chance of going in from the 40 yard line.
12. Never go for the punt.
13. In defence use blitzes as often as possible.
14. Use Time-Outs only when you are losing.
15. Use the 4-3 alignment rather than the 6-1.
16. Use the pro-set formation rather than the T formation and the shotgun.

The Darker Side of Freescape

Liam Hughes of Romford, Essex has strolled through Dark Side from Incentive, and here gives us the benefit of his insight into the game.

Start by destroying ECDs 1-5. Now go to the Regulus. Go into the building that is in front of you when you are facing North. In here you will see fuel rods and shield blocks. Collect all of these.

Now destroy ECDs 5-9. This will give you quite a lot of time. Now go through either Umbriel or Procyon. Walk by the prison sensor until you get thrown in prison.

More C64 Pokes Galore

Never let it be said that ACE ignores C64 owners. After a whole TNT column to themselves in November, C64 fanatics can celebrate the new year with yet more gems. This time they're from Ace hacker and cracker Koen Smedts, Leuven, Belgium. Thanks a million Koen.

When inside collect the Telepod Cristal, then get out. You do this by shooting into the boxes, you will either be giving up fuel or shield. Soon the door will open. When you have exited the prison you will be in the tunnels. When you have got out of the tunnels, go and destroy ECDs 9-15.

Now go to Sirius, enter the building in the West. You do this by shooting the block above the door about 10-15 times. When inside JetPac up to the top, here you will see two fuel rods, and two shield blocks, and a Telepod Cristal.

From here go to Iapetus, get into the building East of the river. To do this you have to JetPac over a force field, then get into the building. In it you will find four tele-transporters. Now go and destroy ECDs 15-20. Go to Tethys and collect the four fuel rods.

Now you can get the other (3rd) Telepod Cristal. Destroy ECDs 20-24. Go to Psyche and go into the Telepod and shoot the cristal that takes you to Pollux. Here you will find the final Telepod Cristal. Use this to take you to the NEREIOL sector. Take the letter K, then go back to Psyche, and go

ROAD RUNNER - KIXX

On the selection screen type US for infinite lives.

115

Let me tell you — I'm impressed. When I played Psygnosis' very sexy game, The Shadow of the Beast, I thought it was extremely difficult. I certainly wasn't expecting so many cheats, tips, and solutions to be sent in this quickly. Obviously there are plenty of ACE readers out there who can beat anything the Software Houses challenge them with.

Anyway, on with the good stuff. The solution below has been compiled from those sent by Mark Bamber of Preston, Lancashire, and Darren Kevin Peter Matthews (phew!) of Southampton in Hampshire. Both also sent maps of the tree level, and Darren also supplied the map for the castle level.

Follow the arrow left at the start. Punch the boulders and the birds, remembering to jump the grabber

Beastly Business

(careful, it's difficult to see!). When you reach the door in the tree, enter it.

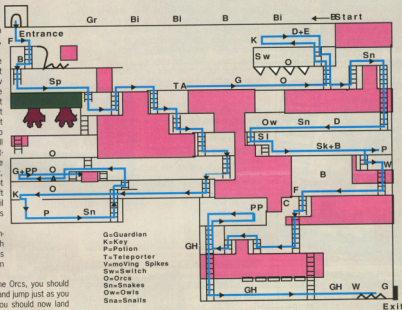

Once you are inside the tree go right, and jump the fireball that appears from behind you. Now descend the ladder and punch the bee when it reaches the lowest point of its flight. Go down the next ladder and run towards the giant insects. Now crouch and keep doing low punches until they are all destroyed. Now go down a platform, then up to the right, continue going right, then down to the right, and down again until you can not go down any further. Now go left and down, then continue left until you reach a point where acid is dripping from above.

Try to avoid the acid, and continue until some orcs approach you. Run towards them, and as they swing their swords, let them have it.

Once you have finished off the Orcs, you should see the end of the platform. Run and jump just as you are about to fall off the edge. You should now land safely on the opposite ledge, from which you can retrieve the key.

Now step off the platform and fall to the lower ledge. Here you can collect a strength potion which will give you full health. Move right, punching the green snakes as you go. Now climb up the ladder and go to the left. Some more purple orcs will come towards you. Use the same method to kill them as you used before.

Run up to the guardian and crouch when it breathes fire. When it stops breathing, stand up, and punch the ball that it holds once. Now crouch again immediately (or you'll get fried). Repeat this process

G=Guardian
K=Key
P=Potion
T=Teleporter
V=Moving Spikes
Sw=Switch
O=Orcs
Sn=Snakes
Ow=Owls
Sna=Snails

Gh=Ghosts
W=Worms
F=Fireball
C=Crawler
A=Acid
Sp=Spiders
PP=PowerPunch
E=Eyes
W=Flamers
B=Boulder
Bl=Bird
Gr=Grabber
Ta=Teleporter
Sl=Slug
D=Devils
Sk=Skulls
B=Bees

until the ball breaks. You should now shoot light bolts. Walk right and enter the teleporter. You will appear at the position marked on the map as TA. Go right until you meet the next guardian.

Fire the bolts at him until he dies. Don't let him touch you, or you will be squashed. Run right after you have killed him and kill the orcs as before. Try to avoid the spikes (not easy).

Now go up the ladder and up again. Go across to the left, and when the eyes bounce up, run under them one at a time. Stop in between each one, as a red devil will also come to you. Dispatch this with a punch. When you get to the outside of the platform, get the key and go back across and down. Now go to the right, and kill the snail, then go right and down the ladder. Blue devils should begin to fall from above. Stand in front of the point at which they fall and punch them. Now jump quickly past the snakes (If you have enough energy left it may be easier to run through them all).

You should now come to some owl heads. When the first of these goes up, run for it and continue running through the devil (unavoidable). Go down to the slug and jump it and then fall down. Continue running and kill the bee as before. Now punch the skulls one by one until you reach another potion which you should collect. Go down the ladder and jump the worm. Continue down and then run along and a large bee will fly above and drop fire bombs. Stand in between the bombs and jump the fireball.

Now move down avoiding the crawler. Go left and kill the ghost, and then go up and collect the power punch which you will take damage from while collecting (unless you have previously pulled the lever which shuts off the electric field around it). Now go down and right and avoid the thrusters. Continue right until you reach the worms. Get as close to each one as possible, and when it goes, run up to the dragon and crouch, then punch like hell. When it dies, quickly run into the well and climb out into daylight.

At ground level go east punching everything until you get to the castle. Before you go inside, collect the light so you can see. Once inside retrieve the tool then make your way down to collect the laser gun. Now disable the field with the tool in order to proceed, killing the monster and collecting the jet pack.

On level two just blast everything. On the final level punch everything, and kill the giant at the end to finish.

OK, you're saying, that makes it easier, but it's still flipping' difficult. I agree, and so does Greg Stone of Chesterfield, Derbyshire. So to help out those players who are still dying after five minutes' play and long to see more of the great graphics in the game, here is his cheat for infinite energy:

When the loading screen with the picture of the beast appears, press and hold down the fire button on the joystick and the left mouse button, until prompted to insert disk two. Now proceed as normal and you will have infinite energy.

AFTER BURNER - ACTIVISION

Levels 1-10 are easy, so try to gain as many bonus lives as possible for later levels. Concentrate on shooting planes down as missiles are easy to dodge.

Levels 11-18 are slightly more difficult, still try to shoot planes down rather than worrying about dodging missiles.

Levels 19-22 are difficult. You will lose some lives. Stop shooting planes and start dodging the missiles. To do this, move up and down. Don't try and pick up any rhythm as the missiles are not fired in a set sequence. If you try to shoot your forward vision will be obscured and you are more likely to get shot down.

On all levels except 8 and 17 go at maximum speed. Levels 5, 13, and 23 are just landing and refuelling except 23 where you have completed the game.

OPERATION WOLF - ACTIVISION

Level 1 is simple - just keep your cross-hair in the middle and occasionally move up, and of course down for supplies.

Level 2 is the same as level 1 except you should go up a lot more for the paratroopers. Level 3 is the same as level 1 except that you should not worry about health too much because the villagers will replenish it. Use a grenade when there are too many men.

Level 4 is as level 1 except you do not need to worry about ammo as the ammo factory is your target. Helicopters are a real problem here.

Level 5 is as level 1 except you should shoot permanently at some points.

Level 6 requires you to kill 100 men, so with little time, fire everywhere, and try to use all your grenades over the first half of a level. There are many grenades to pick up.

Forgotten Worlds

This one comes from Urfan Khan of Coventry, West Midlands, and is a solution to the first three levels.

Level 1

Collect as many Zennies (currency) as you can. Blast your way through aliens in a straightforward manner. (Don't try and shoot the first lot of ground based aliens). Go to the shop. Buy everything on sale. Once you are out of the shop, try and kill the spider-like rocket aliens (they inflict most damage). When you're near the end of the level, guide your man through the gate to the demigod before they close temporarily. Now guide your man to the bottom right-hand corner as fast as possible and the demi-god will die automatically!

Level 2

Kill the lizards and other aliens with your v-cannon. Buy first aid etc. from shop (don't buy multi-directional fire). To avoid giant snakes, stay as close to the top of the screen as possible. To destroy gun-turrets, stay at the bottom of the screen and shoot across (your v-cannon will protect you from their shots). To kill the dust dragon, position your man directly above the dragon's heart and make him face towards the bottom left hand corner, and keep shooting. The dragon will die (your v-cannon will kill the lizards.)

Level 3

Kill the aliens in a straightforward manner. Go to the shop. Buy the necessary equipment. (Don't buy laser cannon). When a star shaped building appears. Guide your man to the bottom right corner, face the top right corner and keep shooting. Once you have reached the top, reposition your man at the bottom of the screen and no shots will touch you.

Once you enter the three gates to the god of war, position your man at the bottom left corner, facing up. The arms of the god will not touch you now.

When you reach the head, move a little to the right and fire up at his shoulder. When it blows up, move to the other side and do the same with the right shoulder until that blows too. Now make your man face to the top left corner and move a little to the left. Now shoot his nose until he dies. All this takes a little practise.

Level 4

Sorry, but you're on your own for this one!

Megatips for a Megablast

Khalid F Howlader has sent in this complete guide to the Bitmap Brother's first rate shoot-em-up, Xenon II. No excuse now – get zapping.

First a note on joysticks. I have a Zipstick and a quickshot turbo, both of which have excellent autofire options. If your joystick doesn't have this then buy one as soon as it becomes available (shop 1). It really comes in handy when your trigger finger gets sore.

Xenon II Shop Table

What to buy and what to sell

SHOP #	SELL	BUY
1	(nothing)	Health (and at all subsequent shops)
2	Rear	Doubleshot Sideshot x 2
4	-	Cannon Powerup x 1
6	-	Laser Powerup x 1
8	-	Laser, Powerup Life (if you need it)
9	-	Life (if you need it)

This table shows the items I bought to complete the game, but at shop 8 you may want to try out some new weapons.

Homing Missiles – no point in getting these as they are given away free just before the halfway badie (level 5)

Bombs – very effective, but if you already have sideshots you will have no room to carry them. If you want to try these out then sell side and buy rear.

Protection – makes your shield last longer. I prefer a life instead.

Dive – useful for getting out of stick situations.

Bitmap Staples – If you want a surprise, this is the thing to get.

Mines – these are effective if you can remember the positions of the waves, as a well laid stream can obliterate a complete wave.

Electro Ball – useful in the rock passage (level 3) for destroying serpents behind you. Sometimes it disappears. In my experience it was usually in a corner of the screen or not on it at all. Bring it back by keeping the fire button down and moving the joystick. If this doesn't work then the ball has expired.

Flamer – this isn't really effective with autofire on because the fire button needs to be constantly pressed to give a continuous stream. Limited range.

Level 2

- Go up and shoot the eye.
- Go along the top.
- Shoot the other eye.
- Go down and shoot the last eye.

Level 2

- Circle around the island destroying bridges.
- Make sure that when you are shooting the spider you are as far away as possible in front of it. Otherwise you will be slightly jammed against the island and all the money will go streaming by.

Level 3

Rock Passage

- When gap appears reverse and let rip with side shot

Level 1 - Shellfish

Shoot it in the eye.

Level 2 - (see diagrams)

Level 3 (0.5) - Crab

Shoot its eyes. To avoid it, move in a rough figure of 8 pattern. Watch out for those extendible claws.

Level 3 (1.0) - Serpent

At this point you should have at least 2 heavy weapons at the sides. Position yourself outside of the bottom-left exit and as he emerges, keep your firepower trained on his head as he moves across. He should then blow up leaving loads of money.

Level 4 (0.5) - Dragon

As it appears, go right to the side and advance upwards. Your sideshot should finish off those small heads. Then hit the bit at the very end and go down, but don't stay at the bottom. Wait until the dragon's head is in view. Just after he has lunged, go right to the bottom and let him have it where it hurts (no, his head, stupid)

Level 4 (1.0) - Chameleon

Just advance up to the side and dispose of his eyes. Now push yourself forward next to his feet and you can get the body with the sideshot as well. This saves having to dodge the tongue.

Level 5 (0.5) - Tank

Pick up the homing missile while destroying the turrets. Now position your laser dead centre so you can blast the tank without getting hit by its own laser.

Level 5 (1.0) - Battlecruiser

If you haven't got a power 3 sideshot then you've got no chance matey. First shoot the engines until they stop. Now polish off both turrets. Advance up the side destroying the turrets. Watch out for little spaceships hitting you from behind. Destroy the lasers and then go down. Pump the ship's rear full of bullets and enjoy the ending.

TINTIN ON THE MOON

"Hello control station! Here is the moon rocket. Tintin speaking. I have just regained consciousness. Everything seems OK, we are now taking over the controls of the rocket." Aboard the rocket, you will relive with Tintin and his friends the most exciting adventure the world has ever known. The first trip to the Moon!

Will you succeed in piloting the red and white rocket through space and achieve a flawless landing? Will you capture Colonel Boris, the traitor, who wants to make the expedition fail? Will you be able to find the extinguishers to put out the fires, even while floating in zero-gravity (which isn't everybody's idea of fun)? Will you succeed in finding and disarming the bombs and freeing your companions in order to get out of the rocket to make the first step on the Moon? You will discover all this by playing "TINTIN ON THE MOON", the first computer game based on the comic books by Hergé...

Before Armstrong there was Tintin and... may be you!

ACE reveals the story, specs and sensation of
gaming...

Each cockpit is equipped with a 25" colour monitor, which serves as a front window to the vehicle and displays graphics of the surrounding environment and the ensuing battle. The secondary screen is used for radar and vehicle status. Dual joysticks with trigger buttons, weapon selection displays, throttle control, directional pedals, ceiling message centre, radio controls for communication with team-mates and attendant and other interior battle functions all add to the realism of the battle

Imagine not only playing a computer game but actually experiencing it: that's the underlying ideal behind ESP Corporation's BattleTech Centre – a simulation experience far more advanced than any other system available to the general public and one of the most exciting games prospects to hit the market in years.

Jordan Weisman, designer of BattleTech Centre and founder of ESP Corporation, told ACE: "We have created a whole new entertainment medium – the world's first complete computer simulation experience for play".

INTERACTIVE STAR WARS

Weisman, a 29 year-old dyslexic, originally had the concept for BattleTech Centre ten years ago. The central idea behind BattleTech Centre was to bring the movie magic made popular by Star Wars to a place where people could actually participate in the total environment of a fantasy world. So Weisman and friend L. Ross Babcock III formed FASA in 1980, with the hope of raising funds to produce the Environmental Simulation Project – but they were greeted with scepticism from potential investors worried about the high risk factor and costs.

Instead, FASA concentrated on creating immensely popular adventure and role-playing boards games such as BattleTech, Renegade Legion and Star Trek. Prompted by this success Weisman decided to revive the BattleTech Centre concept and started FASA's sister company, ESP Corporation – dedicated to interactive entertainment.

BattleTech Centre takes advantage of cheaper microcomputer technologies: "this gives us the speed and graphic power required without having to

BattleTech Specs

Each BattleTech Centre cockpit contains 32Mb of RAM and 26 proprietary PC boards, which make up the graphics, sound and cockpit control systems. The computers communicate with the other cockpits via a local area network. The cockpits main screen can display 200 3D objects in real-time, using a maximum of 64000 colours on screen at any one time.

The game's visuals are split between two viewing screens: the primary "out the front window" screen and a secondary screen used for radar and other information. ESP designed the primary screen graphic system differently than most military type simulators, which model the on-screen universe via a set of polygons requiring incredibly fast maths processors to handle the calculations involved. Instead, BattleTech Centre graphics systems use 19000 pre-drawn "artef" images which were originally created on a CAD system and rendered using ray-tracing, shading, source lighting and edge smoothing. The graphics systems also use a fast and versatile geometry engine which performs hardware scaling of the images in real-time and allows 2D transformations such as mirroring, warping, flips and keystoring.

Primary screen:

Graphics processor	34010 at 40MHz
Theoretical throughput	400 nanoseconds per pixel
Practical throughput	200 "artef" images in real-time
Screen resolution	320x200
Maximum colours on-screen	64000
Total colour palette	16 million colours
System memory	34.5Mb of RAM, expandable to 130.5Mb
Graphic images in memory	19000
Special geometry engine	Hardware scaling of graphic images and performs 2D transformations.

Secondary screen:

Game and graphics processor	68010 at 7MHz
Screen resolution	320x200
Colours per screen	16
Total colour palette	4096

Sound system:

Processor	6809
Digital samplers	ADPCM and PCM format
Channels	20
Watts per channel	63
Memory	420K RAM

The sound system incorporates three sound generation devices, giving it the ability to generate spatially orientated sounds from either straight sampled sounds, sampled sounds with frequency control or FM synthesised sounds.

Cockpit controls:

- 2 Eight position joysticks, each containing three firing buttons
- 1 Analog throttle
- 2 Analog foot pedals
- 52 Momentary switches
- 8 Momentary rocker switches
- 116 button keypad
- 132 segment LCD bargraph
- 128 4 segment LED alphanumeric display

Each cockpit has close to a hundred controls and over a hundred indicator lights.

As each object is placed on screen, it's assigned a colour palette which consists of 256 colours. Palettes are assigned based on the object type, location and situation. An example of this palette use is distance haze. In the real world, as an object gets farther away it tends to blend into the background - the palette system mimics this perfectly BattleTech Centre uses a new series of Mechs to be introduced to role-players over the next six months. This particular Omni-Mech serves mostly in a fire-support role.

use a huge multi-million mainframe computer," says Mike Hanson, director of BattleTech Centre system development at Incredible Technologies. Weisman adds, "In the past only governments could afford this sort of thing. ESP has found a way to bring the person on the street the same sophisticated imaging of commercial and military flight simulations used by NASA and the Air Force".

PLAY THE GAME

The BattleTech Centre is an environmental complex which simulates a fictional universe, the core experience being an eight-player battle. Each player sits in an enclosed cockpit, whose simulator allows each contestant to see a graphic image of the other player's vehicle, their movements and the surrounding terrain. The BattleTech Centre operates in a 5000 square foot location, encompassing a lobby area, two combat information systems, embarkation hall and two launch areas.

The lobby area is decorated as a wardroom of a giant starship with 10-12 video monitors broadcasting fictitious newscasts from the future, cockpit simulator instructions and "God's Eye View" of games in progress. This, coupled with uniformed staff, surrounds players with sensory cues of a science fiction universe. In the Combat Information Centres, a uniformed officer hands players their sheet of orders and they are allowed to form team strategies, scope the terrain of their mission and obtain information on the universe via a "user friendly" computer. The launch areas are dominated by eight cockpits (each 10 feet by 3.5 feet by 5 feet).

The simulators are connected via computer network to produce a real-time simulation experience in an interactive, 3D environment. The terrain, vehicles and mission change every game, so each time you play there are new challenges. In addition, for the first time, the opponent you face is not a computer, but another player who thinks ahead, learns from their mistakes, and is unpredictable.

Each BattleTech Centre will have two eight-player games going on simultaneously. The Centre can change its fictional environment every 30 minutes.

The game software and videos are changed and the result is a new universe and vehicle type to master. The first two environments created for BattleTech Centres are based on FASA's BattleTech and Renegade Legion role-playing games. BattleTech is set in the year 3050, where the masters of the battlefield are huge, manlike BattleMech droids. Renegade Legion is a game of starfighter combat in the year 6000. ESP will create several other environments in the future.

The BattleTech Centre books reservations for teams, or mix and match individuals as they arrive to make up teams for each game sequence. A half-hour experience will be priced on a par with a trip to the cinema or squash-court.

COMING TO A TOWN NEAR YOU?

ESP plans to develop 150 BattleTech Centres across the United States and Canada, and has a license for distribution in Japan. Each complex will cost approximately $750000 to build - $500K for the electronics package and $100-$250K construction cost. The first BattleTech Centre was scheduled to open in Chicago before Christmas, but has been delayed until March 1990 due to leasing problems. Weisman enthuses, "sites in Las Vegas and Los Angeles are under negotiation. We're also in-touch with major UK arcade companies and theme-park organisers - we hope to have a deal signed soon..."

Pictionary on the ST

Domark; Amiga Version
reviewed Issue 26; ACE Rating
790

Having managed to capture the license for the most popular board game of all time (Trivial Pursuit — for those who've been living in a cupboard for the last five years), Domark have now turned their attentions to the latest Yuppie board game — Pictionary. The idea behind this one is that one member of a team draws a picture and the other players have to guess the word that the picture is intended to convey within a set time limit. Guessing the word correctly allows you to move your counter further round the board.

Pictionary on the Amstrad

The first thing that struck me about this version was how well the drawing utility actually stands up in its own right. All of the functions are particularly easy to access (just a single key press for each), and there are enough of them to produce some quite intricate doodles. The arc tool is particularly useful and powerful. As an added bonus, once you have completed a picture you can save it in Neochrome format (it is then a fairly simple matter to import it into most commercial ST art software).

I'm not convinced that paying £25 for Pictionary on the ST is preferable to buying the original board game. However, the ST and other versions do have the additional appeal of being able to assign all the picture drawing to the computer (essential if you're playing solo).

● ACE RATING 750

SPECTRUM VERSION

The first thing I expected to find on loading up this version was an inferior doodle package, so I was pleasantly surprised to find that this was not the case. All of the functions available are easily accessed with either the pointer or a single key press. The disadvantage of this and other 8-bit versions is the lack of a mouse for drawing. I tried playing with the keyboard controls, and to be quite honest, drawing anything other than very simple shapes proved to be a long-winded and painful process. It is still quite fun to play with the computer drawing the piccies, although if you have the cassette version be prepared to wait during the frequent tape loads as the next block of piccies is got into memory.

● ACE RATING 550

AMSTRAD VERSION

£19.99dk £14.99cs

The presentation here is slightly better than on the Spectrum version, although the sound is still limited to a twangy title tune and the occasional blip when you select a function. There are still the same difficulties with drawing without a mouse, although it is a little easier if you use a joystick. Again, not a bad effort, but both this and the other 8-bit versions are a little overpriced.

Fiendish Freddy on the ST

ATARI ST

FIENDISH FREDDY'S BIG TOP 'O FUN

Mindscape; £29.99; Amiga Version reviewed issue 24; ACE Rating 775

Fiendish Freddy is one of those games that really shows off the capabilities of the Amiga. It had great sound, bold cartoon style graphics, and bags of humour. It was also the sort of game that could well have lost all its appeal once it had been converted to the ST. Happily that is not the case. Everything that made this game enough to earn enough money to pay off the loan. These are High Diving, Juggling, Trapeze Swinging, Knife Throwing, Tightrope Walking, and Human Cannonball.

Each of the events is quite difficult to master, but matters are made worse by the presence of Fiendish Freddy himself — an evil little clown who is determined to sabotage every single event.

The whole thing is a lot of fun to play, and the large humorous sprites should keep you entertained for some time. Shame about the tedious disc swapping though.

ACE Rating 725

Continental Circus on the ST

appealing on the Amiga has been packed into the ST version. Packed is, perhaps, the wrong word to use. The whole thing sprawls over no less than six disks. A fact which is not made any more delightful by the necessity for frequently swapping the disc that is currently in the drive.

The idea behind Fiendish Freddy is that the bank are about to foreclose on you and make your circus bankrupt, so unless you can come up with the cash within 24 hours all will be lost. The way you manage this is by performing six circus acts well

CONTINENTAL CIRCUS

VIRGIN/MASTERTRONIC; £19.99dk; Amiga Version reviewed issue 26; ACE Rating 875

Virgin's 2D version of Taito's unusual 3D arcade racing game has now made it to the ST. Continental Circus was not the most amazing arcade game of 1989 but it did have the virtue of being extremely playable. The Amiga version was a superb conversion from the dedicated machine, and as far as I can tell the ST version is identical in almost every respect. I say 'almost' because the ST's inferior sound chip has reared its ugly head again and fouled things up for the Circus programmers. Actually it's not all that bad — your engine just goes suddenly silent as opposing cars whizz past.

That's a minor quibble though — the game is otherwise excellent. There are some interesting aspects to this game which gives it a slight edge over other similar offerings. If you crash, for instance, your car is damaged but not completely written off, so you still have time to crawl into the pits for a repair. Well worth a look if you're a racing fan.

ACE Rating 850

Battlistix on the PC

PC

Psychapse; £24.95dk; Amiga version reviewed issue 20; ACE Rating 686

Psychosis are the sort of company who can take an old, simple idea, chuck in some pretty nifty graphics and some amazing sounds, then bring out a game good enough to be mistaken for an arcade original. The idea for this one apparently comes from Crossfire, but I doubt if many can remember it, I certainly can't. The idea is to shoot balls at the puck and to knock it into the opposing goal.

You can play against a friend or the computer. You've got an infinite number of balls, but each ball only lasts for a couple of seconds. The screen can sometimes get cluttered up with an array of balls. The computer doesn't control the other player, but sets a gravity boundary which can vent the puck from getting into the opposing goal. If you knock in three against the computer (or against your opponent) you can progress to the next level. Hazards line the floor such as magnetic forces and walls which hinder the journey of the puck. There are around 50 pitches in the one player mode and about 80 in the two player. You can adjust the flow of the game by changing parameters like gravity pulls and shooting. There are tokens in the forms of boxes that give you things like exploding balls and letters that spell out "RICOCHET".

The EGA graphics don't stretch to the PC to it's limit, and although the screens that were breathtaking on the ST and Amiga are included, they fail to impress. Sprites and background graphics are pretty to look at but can, as I mentioned before, clutter up the screen. The sound is a bit irritating — enough to give you a headache. The game doesn't really present any challenge, and is far from addictive. Ballistix on the PC is similar to the other 16 bit versions, even down to start-up sequences, but alas, it doesn't quite make the grade.

ACE READERS PROVE THEIR PIXEL PROWESS...

Here at ACE we're well aware that our readers are a talented bunch and on these pages we're going to prove it. The stunning pieces of artwork that follow have all been produced by ACE readers on their own micros. Impressed? So were we. If you think you can do as well or better, then send your masterpieces to ACE READERS ART, Priory Court, 30-32 Farringdon Lane, London. EC1R 3AU. Your artwork should be supplied on a disk or cassette with a slideshow program that can be paused and loading instructions. Ensure that all disks and tapes are clearly labelled with your name and address. Please enclose a stamped addressed envelope if you require the disk/cassette to be returned.

SEAN RYAN, Waterford, Ireland
COMMODORE 64

These two Batman pics are superb examples of the sort of thing you can do even on a machine with low resolution and a limited colour palette. Sean has not been afraid to put shadow to good effect. This is always a good idea because it gives the picture a more dynamic three-dimensional quality than it would otherwise have. Sean has combined this with the use of lighter colours to produce effective highlights.

CHRISTIAN CAPSTAFF, Great Yarmouth
AMSTRAD CPC 464

These two pictures just go to show that you don't have to own expensive 16-bit hardware to produce good artwork. Christian drew these pictures of Superman and Roadrunner using OCP's Advanced Art Studio, one of the best art programs available for 8-bit machines.

Both pictures make good use of strong colour and well defined lines to achieve the necessary cartoon-like quality. Notice the good use of shading in the Roadrunner picture to make up for the limited colours available on the CPC.

ANDREW WALLIS, Brough, North

ATARI ST

The Flintstones and Donkey Kong were both initially drawn using Advanced Art Studio, and then finished off with Degas Elite (an excellent ST art package characterised by its ability to run with GDOS and to work in all three screen resolutions).

Andrew has clearly stuck to the principles of cartoon art to produce these pieces. Keep all your lines strong and simple and go for bold, distinctive colours. You will be surprised at the degree of expression, personality and action you can incorporate into a good cartoon without resorting to complex, detailed drawings.

PoB used Degas Elite to produce the colourful robot picture, and an interesting distortion of the standard ST desktop. He tells us that 'because all of the pictures have light shading in them, I had to use the Degas zoom mode to make sure they were accurate enough and had few or no rough edges. I hope these pictures show that almost anything can be achieved with a palette of only 16 colours.'

We're backed by the resources of one of Britain's most successful publishers so you can order with confidence.

It's so simple!

You may find it hard to believe that we're GIVING away software but it's true. You simply buy any of the titles on this page at the normal retail price listed and then you can pick any other title (on the same title on a different format) absolutely free of charge!

The only condition is that the value of the free game must not be greater than that of the game you're paying for.

Apart from that there are no strings attached. It's literally TWO for the price of one! Or FOUR for the price of two...the sky's the limit! Have you ever seen a better offer...?

SUMMER GAMES

Epix/US Gold • C64 £9.95 cs £14.95dk • BM PC £29.95dk

Epix sporting simulations are of high quality but none have quite captured the playability and style of the original Summer Games and its immediate successor, Summer Games 2. One to six players can take part in high jump, gymnastics, springboard diving, clay pigeon shooting, swimming, pole vault - and others - with lovely large graphics and smooth animation throughout. Control of your athlete can be complex so practice is recommended.

THRUST

Firebird • Spectrum £1.95cs • C64 £1.95cs

Terrifyingly sensitive controls and a large helping of real-life physics make this budget title an absolute must. Flying down through the caverns of an enemy-held planet, you have to pick up fuel and destroy hostile gun turrets without crashing into the tunnel walls. Tough enough as it is, but then you've got to make the return journey with a heavy load slung under your craft. Very mean, very addictive.

ADVENTURES

After a brief surge of RPG related popularity, the traditional text-entry adventure is rapidly disappearing. But for those of you who savour the powers of the imagination, the verbal twist, and the thrill of encountering other characters, this game genre still has much to recommend it. Rainbird • Atari ST £24.95dk • Amiga £24.95dk • PC £24.95dk

This tale of insider dealings, infidelity and crooked business deals is unlikely to appeal to adventurers who prefer to wander through vast dungeon networks seeking treasure. But for those who are fed up with traditional adventuring, it's like a breath of fresh air. Superb graphics, great atmosphere and a nail-biting plot makes this a terrific game that grips from the start.

Guide pogo to the top of eight towers using the spiral of platforms, lifts and ladders that form the route. It's a highly original game that strikes a fine balance between frustration and addiction, added to which is the rotary scroll, thus making it a good-looking, playable winner of a game.

Bizarre and compelling strategy game played over the chequered surface of a planet dominated by the Sentinel. Fundamentally you have to absorb energy while trying to stop the Sentinel from absorbing yours. A clean brain and fast trigger finger are both necessary in this very original and large - 10,000 possible landscapes - game.

Boulderdash clone that completely outdoes the original on this particular machine. Again (see Boulderdash above) you're digging for diamonds in caverns over a hundred different screens - with a time limit for each screen. A fascinating geometrical oddity, this Russian puzzle turns the obscure mathematical topic of packing into a cult game. One at a time, shapes fall downwards into a rectangular playing area. Left to their own devices they'll pile up until they reach the top of the screen; your task is to guide them down and pack them tightly so that doesn't happen. Different versions have proved to be rather variable in their arcade aspects, but the brilliantly simple idea behind them means they're well worth a look whatever your machine.

One of the first space games to use vector graphics, it's a shooting and trading effort set across several galaxies, with plenty of variety to the game play. RPG

Role-playing games have exerted an enormous influence on modern game-styles. They combine the atmosphere of text adventures with the action of arcade games and the brain exercise of strategy – but their graphical presentation tends to be weaker than other game genres. Gameplay centres around developing characters by raising their experience and skill levels in conflict with other, computer-controlled nasties. All that – and a quest too....

THE BARD'S TALE II

Electronic Arts, C64
£16.95, Amiga £24.95

The highly successful predecessor to Bards Tale III. BT II has the advantage of being slightly easier to advance. The Amiga version features some very nice sampled monk chants when you enter a temple and excellently coloured graphics. And of course, you can update your favourite characters, their attributes and equipment for use in BT III.

THE BARD'S TALE III

Electronic Arts • C64
£14.95

The latest Bard's Tale game offers a number of refinements over its predecessors (all of which are still well worth taking a good look at). First, the graphics are better animated. Second, there are ranged combat routines which take careful account of the distance between you and your opponents. Finally, the game's large and represents excellent value for money.

INFOGAMES' BRIDGE

£12.95

Change around irradiated USA whopping mutant bunnies and biker sun in this role-playing epic. The atmosphere may not be as good as the Bard's Tale series of games, but the extra dimension of strategy leaves the cut, slash and spell scenario of the BT series way behind.

★ ACE RATED 921

Graphically the best of all contract bridge simulations, with large playing cards depicted against a suitably green baize background. Plays a good game for a computer, which after all is a bit short in the imagination and flair department, and features a wide range of options and bidding conventions which you can toggle of according to your style.

The perfect game for 8 bit owners who go green with envy when they look at Conflict Europe. Theatre Europe is the forerunner to the excellent 16 bit game. The graphics and overall play are not as sophisticated, but on the whole it still is one heck of a game.

A low level flight sim with a bit of fun. THE DUEL - TEST DRIVE II

Accolade ● C64 ● ST ●

Accolade tried to right all the Test Drive wrongs with this sequel, and to an extent they succeeded. There's nothing serious about the game. It's just a lot of fun. It doesn't tend to be technically or visually accurate, but why should it?

THE ARSENAL

This may not be the place to say it, but it's got to be said and there's a wee space here, so why not? Arsenal are finished. This may not matter to you, but here in the ACE office it's an issue of great importance. You see, ACE's ebullient, bullish etc. ad manager, Gary Williams is an Arsenal season ticket holder (let's just pass over the fact that Gary comes from Blackpool). Last May he was cock-a-hoop, as Michael Thomas scored the last minute goal at Anfield that secured the league championship.

Well, eat your heart out Gary Williams. As I write it is a mere 18 hours since Arsenal were soundly beaten by Liverpool at Anfield. It's only a few days since they were hammered 3-1 by lowly Oldham Athletic (and not even George Graham could blame it on the plastic pitch).

Is this the end of Arsenal? Should Gary Williams trade his season ticket at Highbury for a place on the terraces at Boundary Park, famous home of the famous 'Latics'? Watch this space....

Is one of the wrapped shapes under the tree remarkably computer-shaped? Has it got your name on the gift-tag? If so, go out today and buy the following: mains plug, small headed screwdriver with a long handle, four-way electrical socket, blank disks/tapes. This way you won't have to take the plug off the kettle to set up the computer, or place it somewhere utterly inconvenient just so that you're near the double power point, etc.

Launched at CES in Chicago last June, the Nintendo Game Boy is a fully portable video game system which uses interchangeable cartridges and offers multi-player action, monochrome LCD display and digital stereo sound. The Game Boy will be officially launched in the UK at the Earl's Court Toy Fair in January.

With each Game Boy you get the superlative Soviet-sourced Tetris game, stereo earphones and Video Link – an accessory that allows two or more players to connect their Game Boys and compete tournament-style among themselves.

In addition to Tetris, there is a large, and ever increasing, library of Game Boy titles including Super Mario Land, LodeRunner and Tennis.

Although a UK price is yet to be set, the average Game Boy US retail price is $89.95, with $19.95 per game cartridge.

The Nintendo NES is the most popular video game system in the world, the Deluxe NES includes control deck, two hand-held controllers, ROB (Robot Operated Buddy), Zapper light gun and two game cartridges (Duck Hunt and Super Mario Bros). As well as a huge range of games titles like The Legend of Zelda, Super Mario Bros II and III, and Gradius, Japanese Nintendo researchers have developed an exciting range of peripherals which include Powerpad (an interactive electronic mat which allows the player's body movements to control the on-screen action of the characters), Hands Free (a controller which helps the physically disabled enjoy home video game play with the help of a "sip and puff tube"), and a computerised knitting machine.

GO FOR IT

Winning a Nintendo Game Boy or Deluxe NES could not be simpler, just answer the following questions:

1. When was Nintendo founded?
(a) 1899 (b) 1967 (c) 1987
2. Which computer, console or coin-op game would you most like to see converted to the Nintendo Game Boy? Why?
3. Finally, tell us which are your TWO favourite articles or sections in this month's ACE, and your TWO least favourite sections. Don't worry – there are no "right answers" for this question. We just want to hear your views, and whatever you say will in no way affect the outcome of the competition.

Please write your answers (in BLOCK CAPITALS) on the back of a postcard. Don't forget to include your full name, address and telephone number.

Send your completed postcard to:
ACE NINTENDO COMPETITION,
Priory Court, 30-32 Farrington Lane,
London EC1R 3AU.

THE PRIZES

The Nintendo Game Boy will be awarded to the first entry – drawn at random from the entries received prior to the closing date – giving the correct answer to question (1). The Nintendo Deluxe NES will be awarded to the second correct entry.

THE RULES

- (1) The closing date for entries is 7th January, 1990.
- (2) Employees of EMAP and Nintendo are not eligible for entry.

GREAT DEALS!

Christmas is coming and and your friendly local computer dealer is trying all the arts of friendly persuasion to get you into his shop and sell you some nice software. And with offers like this going down are you foolish enough to resist?

BOOTS UP THE WINNERS

Two for the price of one ... maybe your mind is turning towards treating yourself to a compilation this Christmas. If you buy US Gold's Winners package (all formats: contains Thunderblade, Blasteroids, LED Storm, Impossible Mission II, (8bit only) Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom) from any software department in Boots, you'll find an order form inside the box entitling you to a free Kixx game.

Send the form off to US Gold before the end of January and your choice of game will plunk through the letter box a few days later. Amiga and ST owners, be warned: Kixx games are 8bit only. But if US Gold's Moonwalker is on your wants list, stroll into Boots to buy it, and you'll get a £1 voucher which you can put towards the cost of any Michael Jackson CD, record or tape.

BADGED SOFTWARE

Staying with Michael Jackson and Moonwalker, but moving on to your local W H Smith or John Menzies. No vouchers, but there's a nice fat Michael Jackson badge with every copy of Moonwalker bought in these outlets.

GOODIES AND GIVEAWAYS IN THE NORTH AND MIDLANDS,

The games chain Microbyte seems to be practically giving software away. In a wild display of seasonal goodwill, there are prizes, draws and T-shirts on a number of major titles. Should you buy Onslaught, The Untouchables, Robocop, Ghostbusters II or Hard Drive? from Microbyte, don't, whatever you do, forget to pick up your competition entry form. Once filled in, this form will be entered into a Microbyte grand draw.

Prizes are Untouchables and Robocop videos for buyers of those games and £50 software vouchers with Onslaught. First prizes for Hard Drive? and Ghostbusters buyers are software vouchers for a massive £200, and Ghostbusters runners-up will get free Odeon cinema tickets. Get to the front of the queue and there are further freebies on offer: a free T-shirt or poster when you buy Onslaught; an A1 poster to go with Ghostbusters II; the exclusive Domark goodie bag with Hard Drive, but stocks on all these will be limited.

HERE WE GO, HERE WE GO

Live in the Liverpool area? Check out your local Bits and Bytes store when buying your US Gold games because there is a big competition going on between the store and USG. It'll be your chance to win a season ticket at either Anfield or Goodison Park, so it's well worth entering.

VIRGIN VOUCHERS

Christmas always leaves a gaping hole in your wallet, but if you buy your presents from any Virgin outlet (Games Centres, Megastores, whatever) the special Virgin voucher offer might ease the strain a bit. Buy any product to the value of £10 or more, before Christmas, and you will get a book of vouchers, in various denominations, adding up to £5. These can be redeemed any purchases at any Virgin store. Can't be bad.

There are Microbyte stores in the Arndale Centre, Manchester; Goosegate, and the Broadmarsh Centre, Nottingham; Kirkgate, Wakefield; the Metro Centre, Gateshead; the Greenmarket, Newcastle Upon Tyne; the Kirkgate Centre, Bradford; the Bull Ring Centre, Birmingham; and the County Arcade, Leeds. One of these must be near you! Virgin has its Games Centre outlets on London's Oxford Street (at Marble Arch, within the Megastore, and at no 100) and Bristol, and also in Megastores in Birmingham, Brighton, Dublin, Edinburgh, Glasgow (at Union St and Argyle St), Leeds, and Nottingham.

All offers and promotions are subject to availability of stock. Although we do our best to ensure our dealer promotion information is accurate at the time of going to press, ACE cannot take any responsibility for changes or cancellations to dealers' plans.

PRIZE PUZZLE

Set by Archie Medes

To herald in the 1990's, here's a crossword puzzle based on the current year. As you can see, this number has already been entered at 3 across (that's the easy bit). Your task is to find two values, A and B, such that the expressions given will also fit into this grid.

Incidentally, if you try this before the new year, it's no use putting '1989' in at 3 across. If you do, there is no solution possible.

The Clues

Across

- 3) The current year
4) B
5) A
6) A times B

Down

- 1) A squared
2) B squared

A quick note for puzzlers

We are hoping to increase the number and variety of puzzles appearing in these pages. If you have any comments or ideas that you would like to put forward on Pink Page Puzzles, write to us at: ACE Magazine, 30-32 Farringdon Lane, London, EC1R 3AU.

PRIZE PUZZLE JANUARY 1990 ENTRY FORM

Name:

Address:

Telephone: Listing enclosed (optional): ☐

Completed entry forms should be sent to: ACE Jan '90 Prize Puzzle, 30-32 Farringdon Lane, London, EC1R 3AU, by 7/1/90.

Results

Because of our little hiccup with the November puzzle (which meant printing it again and extending the deadline), there are no results this month.

But, never fear, the results for the previous two puzzles will be printed in the February edition.

Please note that puzzles are now referenced by month and year, not puzzle.

February will also see the return of the much missed ACE Prize Crossword. So all you word addicts out there will soon be able to get your fix again in your favourite Computer Monthly.

MONTHLY PAYMENT TERMS ARE NOW AVAILABLE THROUGH LOMBARD TRICITY FINANCE ON ALL PURCHASES OVER £150.00. PLEASE RING FOR DETAILS

AND A COPY OF BRUCE LEE LIVES COMPUTER GAME

THE GAME

The master of the martial arts, that lethal legend, BRUCE LEE IS BACK. Mindscape/Software Toolworks latest game, Bruce Lee Lives (reviewed on page 49), "the final martial arts adventure" allows you - through practice and battle - to become Bruce Lee, master of jeet kune do, Bruce's own deadly form of martial arts.

Among the new features found in the game are opponent Artificial Intelligence and a control macro facility. The unique use of AI lets your enemies memorise your technique and counter-attack... move-for-move! To win each brutal match, you must constantly alter and rework your fighting method. The programmable macro control facility lets you choreograph any series of fighting moves - punches, jabs, kicks, etc - and assign them all to one control trigger.

"You don't just play Bruce Lee Lives - you enter it!"

WHAT YOU HAVE TO DO...

To win these fabulous Bruce Lee prizes just answer the following question:

- 1 Who isn't a movie martial arts star?
(a) Bruce Lee (b) Chuck Norris (c) Gary Williams

Write the answer on the back of a postcard and give us a gameplaying tip on your favourite computer, console or coin-op game... Have you found a hidden cheat mode or secret level? Perhaps a poke for peek performance? How about a well tested tactic to tackle tense times?

BRUCE LEE LIVES!

The BLITTER END

XMAS SILLY SEASON STARTS HERE!

If's been a strange month for the ACE team... Garry 'Wodge' Williams is off the booze, Rik 'Hitman' Haynes said he couldn't stand another drink either, and Jim 'Who's that girl' Willis hasn't made a move on a girlie all month! How are they going to cope with the Christmas Party Season? And to top it off, Steve 'Could I borrow 20p' Cooke has disappeared into the Bermuda triangle - and he didn't even leave me a Christam present!

In-love with Lovecraft?

Did you like the illustration of HP Lovecraft in last month's ACE issue 27, page 37? If the answer is yes, you'd be pleased to know you can get this classy HP Lovecraft Centenary design on a T-Shirt (Sizes: Large and Extra Large £7.95), Limited Edition Print (Only 100 copies, signed and numbered by the artist £3.50) or Signed Edition Print (£2). Please make cheques/PO's payable to D.C. Designs (all UK orders post free). Order from: Dave Carson, Flat 10, Block J, Peabody Estate, Horseferry Road, London SW1P 2EN. DC Designs also does personalised designs, send SAE with your enquiries.

Atari Lynx Competition

The closing date for the Atari Lynx competition (further details ACE issue 27, page 121) has been extended to 7th January, 1990.

ZZZ... ZZZ... ZZZ...

ing... Amiga Centre Scotland for its Multiport Board press release. I quote: "From CMI, this two serial, one parallel, and optional SCSI port expansion device comes complete with built-in high-speed serial networking support. It features 2 Serial Ports (DB9 RS-232 and 8 pin mini DIN RS-422), 1 DB25 parallel printer port, optional SCSI hard drive interface, and full CMI, net-AppleTalk compatible hardware. Barry Walsh, development consultant, said 'it dramatically expands the Amiga's I/O capabilities. This opens up so many possibilities for Amiga expansion that we know people have been waiting for'."

Well, I'm sure you agree, it's pretty exciting stuff, eh? But if low level SCSI format supports aren't among your most desired possessions, you can always check out next month's ACE for the latest games news, views, reviews, previews, interviews and other words that don't end in ws. But for now, avior and have a very merry Christmas.

Blit-Blit!

NEXT MONTH

In the next all action issue of ACE we take an in-depth look at computer footie games (including the greatest football game to date... Anco's Kick Off), interview Oscar-winning graphics wizard John Lasseter, talk to The Twits - Domark's lively bosses, give you music maestros the complete buyers guide to MIDI, life and everything, plus much more...

ACE 29 goes out for sale Thursday 4th January, 1990.

CRAZY CAPTION COMPETITION

Don't do it Richard, being a millionaire and multi-media personality can't be that bad! Whether or not you gun for Richard Branson, you could get your grubby little mitts on a copy of Virgin/Mastertonic's latest game for your computer. All you have to do is give us a caption for the pic and a games tip for your favourite coin-op, console or computer game. The pic was taken at a recent press party (ACE was there in full force) to launch the Sega Challenge games championships. The winning entry will be chosen by panel of well informed, sensible and extremely unbiased judges - that's let's out most of the legal system I here you cry - but fear not because it's a panel of just one, i.e. me! The winner will be the person with either the funniest, most boring or totally insane caption. Send your entries (with attached crisp £5 note!!) to: VIRGIN ON THE RIDICULOUS, Bitter End Competition, ACE, Priority Court, 30-32 Farringdon Lane, London EC1R 3AU. Don't forget the games tip, and include your full name, address and computer model. Entries must reach us by 7th January, 1990.

You are Captain Kirk!

You are Captain T. Kirk, the Enterprise is yours and your mission is to drop off three intergalactic ambassadors on a safe planet, without starting a war.

You can interact freely with your crew - Spock, Scotty and the usual team are there, but you are pitted against the remorseless aggression of K'laa and the Klingons, and you have to escape from the deadly Barrier Zone.

The revolutionary graphics create the most realistic game ever.

The play of Star Trek V changes the suit the challenge at hand. The strategy and action is your responsibility. Not only do you have to deal with outside forces, but all is not well within the Starship. Just how good a Captain are you?
